BY MARGUERITE MARTYN.

YOU remember how the Balkan Wars provided fashion designs with ideas to satisfy fickle feminine fancy through several seasons. From Balkan blouses with the Magyar sleeves, the Bulgarian embroideries and figured stuffs, Turkish sashes and harem skirts, we've scarcely recovered even yet.

Strange is caprice of Fate that will let one nation's sorrows serve as a means to gladden the raiment of a noncombatant nation's women! But true it is, and already the present wars are proving a windfall to fashion designers. A national association of retail milliners meeting in Chicago decided last week that all fashions shall be of strongly military character.

These caterers exclusively to the tastes of all the uncertain-yet-and-hard-to-please ones, have braved the war news and extracted such names as will be easily recognized by even their most frivolous patronesses as having some connection with something that is new and "up-to-date" and applied these names where they will fit the new fall shapes.

A HELMET-SHAPED bonnet will be known as the Kaiser Wilhelm. A long, low, close-fitting, visored toque will be known as "the Uhlan." Tri-cornes trimmed in military fashion with binding and rosette of gros-grain ribbon or gold braid will answer to the name of "Poincare." A bonnet flaunting coque feathers is named after Earl Kitchener, although it is doubtful if he has had time to acknowledge the honor. There are cossack turbans, Belgian toques and Hilander bonnets and there are cute little Servian caps and there are symptoms that tomorrow there may be evolved a turban shaped like a submarine to be known as the "Rear-Admiral Beatty."

Admirably nonpartisan have been the designers in selecting their models. Or were they merely indiscriminate, depending upon woman's usual demand for becomingness superseding all other requirements? And may not such indiscriminateness amount to indiscretion in these ticklish times? May not these designers have planned without the enemy, as other experts in strategy have been known to do? Suppose women shoppers should develop opinions just like other peoples?

SUPPOSE they should decide to take this thing seriously and find in the new hats a means of expressing national sympathies they aren't expected to express otherwise in this neutral country? Then, my! what battles in the bonnet shops may ensue when the new fall hats come to heterogeneous St. Louis!

Just imagine a too insistent saleswoman trying to make a sympathizer of the Czar believe a hat named the Kaiserin is just the hat for her! Imagine the painful self-sacrifice to be undergone by the heiress of one of our old French families when she finds a "Uhlan" is the only hat in the shop which is becoming to her! Suppose a small Servian woman wearing a Russian blouse, a Poincare hat and a pair of English walking boots, true to all the allies, met a large lady in a German military cape and helmet—what would happen?

REALLY, friends and sister style sufferers, do you think we'd better risk the international complications these threatened fall styles may engender! Had we not better be warned in time? And it isn't too late yet to save the day. The Chicago convention may also have entertained some womanly fears, for it also launched a hat which it called "the Woodrow," named after President Wilson.

"The Woodrow" was not described in the announcements.

I have dared to draw my own conception of what a truly democratic hat should be. It need not be an exclusive design to be democratic, need it? It should be modest—not noisy, I think. That is, it need not bray. Of course it will have to have long ears. But then, uglier things than long, black ears have been used on hats. Better watchfully wait for "the Woodrow" than risk the battle of the bonnets.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Unity of the World.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

The human race does not wish anyone to be put to death. Most men have parents, wives, children, cousins, brothers, sisters and relatives who wish to enjoy the best fortune, so wars that sacrifice so many lives are not desired by anyone. In order to keep the unity of the best interest of all, nations have made laws and appointed officers to execute them. Sometimes the law is not entirely for the good of the people or the working class, but the nation is always desirous for peace. An international peace forum has been established which was expected to keep peace, but it has not accomplished all that has been hoped for it to do. Why? Because it is only an association, without a single power, and when great crises arise like the Russo-Japanese War, the Italian-Turkish War and the Balkan War, it proves itself unsuccessful.

The greatest naval power is Great Britain, the greatest military power is Germany, and all the other nations strive to equal if not exceed these two leading powers, so the people have heavy taxes to pay, besides suffering, painful experiences and dire peril. Congress and Governments cannot be depended upon entirely to settle these matters, so each individual must have a personal interest, and use his influence to bring about public opinion so strong that the nations will be obliged to be peaceful in their actions. The people do not know their power. If they knew it and acted together they could prevent wars.

It seems uncivilized and foolish to spend wealth and life only for national and race matters, which is much like the religious wars of the medieval times. By friendship we must unite the people of the world into one great union and establish a greater government, which we might call the government of the world. If there should be a disagreement it could be settled before the supreme court of the world, which would be the greatest power of judgment. This would be a change from national into an international or world socialism.

MEMBER FOURTEENTH WARD SOCIALIST PARTY.

Women Do Serve at War.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Those opposed to suffrage argue woman should not have the vote because she can't serve in time of war. Some must stay behind to nurse the wounded, care for the children and look after home-life. Woman does this and bears the most suffering from loss on the battlefield. So think again before saying "woman can't serve her country."

A WOMAN.

A Home For Victims of Drug Habit.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

I write this letter in hope that some philanthropist will read it and perhaps some gain to mankind will result in a home being founded for those poor creatures who are addicted to the morphine, opium, cocaine and other habits, wherein they may be cured of one of the most growing evils of the century.

I have noticed articles many times in the daily press of efforts made to enact legislation to prohibit the import of these drugs except for medicinal purposes, but I have failed to notice in a single instance what is to become of the poor unfortunates who have become slaves to the drugs. It seems that the general public look upon these creatures as outcasts from society, with absolutely no chance for reform, and right here I want to say that many of these poor victims would gladly welcome a chance to be cured if an opportunity presented itself.

When I was a young man, a mere boy, you might say, I was prescribed morphine by an unscrupulous physician who cared more for the almighty dollar than a human life, with the result that today I am estranged by my friends and relatives and silently waiting for the end to come which is only a matter of but a short time. It is not, however, my fate which concerns me, but for the sake of humanity I hope someone will take the initiative and do something to save the lives of these unfortunates before it is too late.

I would gladly sacrifice my life if I thought for a moment it would be the means of saving the many others addicted to this terrible habit.

VICTIM.

THE TRAGEDY OF BELGIUM.

Smaller than Maryland, but with a population nearing 8,000,000, Belgium was the most densely populated country in the world. Centuries of thrift had made its soil an incomparable garden; its huge industries exacted great import of food. Antwerp stood, perhaps, second to New York in the bulk of its commerce.

Generations of skilled architects had enriched the doomed land with cities whose beauty was the despair of emulation. To call the roll of towns like Bruges, Ypres, Louvain, Ghent, Courtai is to bring up visions of pictured beauty familiar to the world. To call another roll beginning with Waterloo and Oudenarde is to name Belgium as the cockpit of past wars. To give Europe a buffer state for peace its neutrality for the future was guaranteed by treaty. Having little faith in the false oaths of Emperors, the Belgians taxed industry to sustain an army of a quarter of a million men.

That was Belgium. Today it is a ruin. The conquerors are wasting the garnered wealth of the past. Louvain, we are told, is destroyed because its inhabitants defended it; Louvain, with its university dating back 500 years and the marvelous Cloth Workers' Hall a hundred years older than that!

Defending their homes is the capital offense which poor men can commit. There is no trial; the word of a commander is sufficient; a rattle of rifles and a gray-haired peasant falls bleeding upon the ashes of his rooftree. In one village of 500 houses a score only were left standing. Crowding the roads to France, to Antwerp, to Holland, one gigantic hospital, there streams a pitiful line of fugitives. Even in their last resort they may not be safe. The latest beneficent invention of man, turned to destruction's use, swoops over Antwerp by night.

Future ages will dilate upon the heroism of Belgium in this year of anguish, torture and death. Today the world surveys the tragedy of Belgium.

NAVAL BATTLE'S MORAL EFFECTS.

The British victory off Helgoland effects small change in the conditions under which the future decisive battle between England and Germany will be fought. Germany lost only a few of its lighter vessels, including two of her cloud of destroyers. She has many heavier and more powerful warships left.

But the moral effects of the engagement may be important. It comes just at a time when it may cause wavering Italy to cast her lot with the allies.

WOMAN ON THE FARM.

Hon. David Franklin Houston, United States Secretary of Agriculture, is trying to spur and shame American farmers into making better provision for the comfort and independence of their wives and daughters. He thinks it quite as reasonable to pipe water into the kitchen sink and the bathroom as into the stables, pigpens and irrigation ditches. Fortifying his propaganda with divers arguments, he sums them all up in this clincher:

"Woman is the most important economic factor on the farm." That is to say, she is entitled to decent treatment merely as a good investment.

Quite frequently, no doubt, the tightwads against whom the Secretary thunders might be willing to admit that she has some human value also, which makes her doubly important.

IN THE ARID ZONE.

Strange rumblings are coming out of Jefferson City. Rumblings of a Democratic water wagon, with Senator Stone as driver and Col. Nick Bell of St. Louis as chief spieler. Among the notable passengers are United States District Attorney Francis Wilson of Kansas City, widely known in the legislative halls of this State, and State Treasurer E. P. Deal, with Gov. Major making a spirited dash to get aboard. And there is our own William J. Brennan, better known as "Boots," a total abstainer, almost made chairman of the Democratic City Committee.

Through what astounding metamorphosis is Democracy passing? Water wagons have been an unknown sort of vehicle around Democratic gatherings of the past. Many Missouri Democrats of more than State-wide reputation have been noted for their capacity to consume any and all sorts of mixtures. Individual option, at least, seems to be making rapid progress. Only last week Jackson County, outside of Kansas City, voted dry, and here we have a wagon load of celebrities who have voted themselves dry.

These are strange things in a State which created the high ball, the rickey and the mint julep. Can so much individual aridity be real, or are these Democratic notables merely experimenting? We shall look to the future for the answer.

4-CENT FARES IN CLEVELAND.

Three-cent care fares have been found inadequate to earn interest on the bonded debt of the Cleveland street railways. Beginning Sept. 1 the city authorizes collection of 4-cent fares, with universal transfers.

Penny and 2-penny fares earn fair profits on Europe's municipally owned car lines, but higher wages and higher cost of everything that goes into a street railway necessitate, it would appear, charges at least twice as high in this country, under the most favorable circumstances at present attainable.

THE WAR'S GREAT MELTING POT.

How religious prejudices in Ireland have been modified by the war, never to reappear in their unlovely forms of the past, is already of public record. Russian promises of liberality toward Jews and Polish Catholics must have at least some substantial fulfillment. A tremendous advance for religious toleration, not only in a national but an international sense, is also to be predicted. This is one of the blessings the war will bring along with incomputable misfortunes.

Protestant Germany is fighting together with Catholic Austria. On the other side Greek Catholic Servia and Montenegro, Orthodox Russia, Catholic Belgium, Protestant England, Catholic and Agnostic France, Catholic Portugal and Shintoistic Japan are joined in the same cause. That on both sides men of widely divergent religious views are experiencing great vicissitudes and incurring great sacrifices in behalf of the same ends must bring them in closer touch with one another, must result in better understandings, must contribute to greater breadth of religious conceptions and human sympathies.

Progress in this direction, once gained by the world, will not be lost. The animosities created by the war will be outlived by the sense of neighborliness, the respect, the amiable friendships it will promote. Many cold indifferences will be melted and prejudices destroyed. So many European peoples have not been united by common purposes since the crusades.

CONCERNING THE APPLE CROP.

Uncle Sam's Department of Agriculture figures this year's American apple crop at 210,000,000 bushels.

That is roughly 10 bushels per family, or nearly a bushel per family per month.

"An apple a day," the old saying had it, "keeps the doctor away." It might, if the apple a day could get delivered to each person old enough to eat it. Unluckily, such delivery has not yet been perfected. Most American families are more familiar with bananas brought from Honduras than with apples grown in their own respective states. The bananas are grown, gathered and marketed by a remarkably efficient trust, and are sold at prices below those demanded for apples of equal quality. The banana trade testifies eloquently of the value of organization; the apple trade, in the main, illustrates that other old saying, "What's everybody's business is nobody's business."

At the risk of provoking a hot argument we venture the opinion that the finest flavored apples are those grown farthest north—in the eastern provinces of Canada, in New England and New York. Folks in the Maryland and Virginia apple districts won't concede the validity of that opinion for a minute. Nor those in Oregon or Washington, whose apples are undoubtedly the largest, handsomest, most skillfully grown, picked, packed and marketed, and command the highest price.

Missouri's apples are hard to beat, for juiciness and savor; but Missouri's apples, like her peaches, do not, except in the rarest instances, get anything like the close, scientific cultivation and marketing that account as much as soil and climate for the phenomenal success of the apples of the Pacific Northwest. Missouri's peaches, by the way, just now plentiful in the local market, and at very fair prices indeed, are, in our judgment, superior in sheer eating quality to those of Delaware or Maryland or Georgia or Texas. But too many of them come to market specked and flawed for want of fertilization and cultivation, of timely spraying against insect and scale tree pests, and of top class packing. They come in rusty homespun to compete against the Southern and Western peaches of inferior quality but finer appearance.

We should like to know what has become of the Strawberry Pippin and of the great, mellow, honey-sweet and melon-juicy Bellflowers of 30 years ago. One seldom sees them any more, and the surviving specimens are small and scrawny compared with their illustrious ancestors.

Will the London buyers this year, as usual, skim the cream of the Maine orchards, leaving only the "seconds" for the American trade? Or will London feel too poor in this year of war taxes to indulge her pampered palate with the world's best in all good eating? If so, the year's hard cider crop in the Pine Tree State should be larger than ever. O, yes, the Maine prohibition law exempts hard cider. The farmers make it at home. It gives them, in theory and to some extent in practice, a monopoly of the profitable jag trade in that historically but not actually dry Commonwealth. It is this exemption, favoring the farmer's cider mills, that has held Maine in the dry column against repeated assaults of the brewing and distilling interests of other states. Maine doesn't brew any beer nor distill any whisky. Her "dry" law is only another form of protective tariff—protecting her apple-growing farmers against the hurtful competition of alien brews and distillations. And it is well known one can obtain the desired condition of hilarious irresponsibility quite as quickly and lastingly on hard cider as on anything Illinois or Kentucky sends to market. Deprive the farmers of that fat exemption and Maine, we are credibly assured, would go wet in a hurry.

It is no doubt proof of a primitive strain in the writer of these lines that, after testing and tasting all the famous apples of the world, from the noblest Belgians westward through Maine's Greening orchards, Massachusetts' Roxbury russets, Arkansas' celebrated "Blacks" and Colorado's Winesaps, on to the beauties of Oregon, he recalls no apple savor so poignantly delightful as that of the sour-sweet crab apples that grew along the mid-northern streams a generation ago. Some of the crab thickets were to be found in every village. Does anybody else remember how indescribably sweet was the fragrance of the crab apple blossoms, blown on spring breezes through open windows into languid schoolrooms, and how irresistibly it summoned small pagans into the cool depths of brookside groves?

LAGGARD PATRIOTS.

Unless sufficient Congressmen to make a quorum can be mustered for the people's business at Washington, and kept on the job, President Wilson may be tempted to revise his Fourth of July address, in which he complimented the Congress on patriotically enduring Washington's midsummer heat to put through reform legislation. There were 230 absentees a few days ago, and Speaker Clark has lately been able to muster enough members to act on important measures only by threatening to have the laggards brought into the House under arrest. Considering their extreme eagerness to be sent to Washington, one wonders they are not more keen to justify the faith of the voters who chose them.

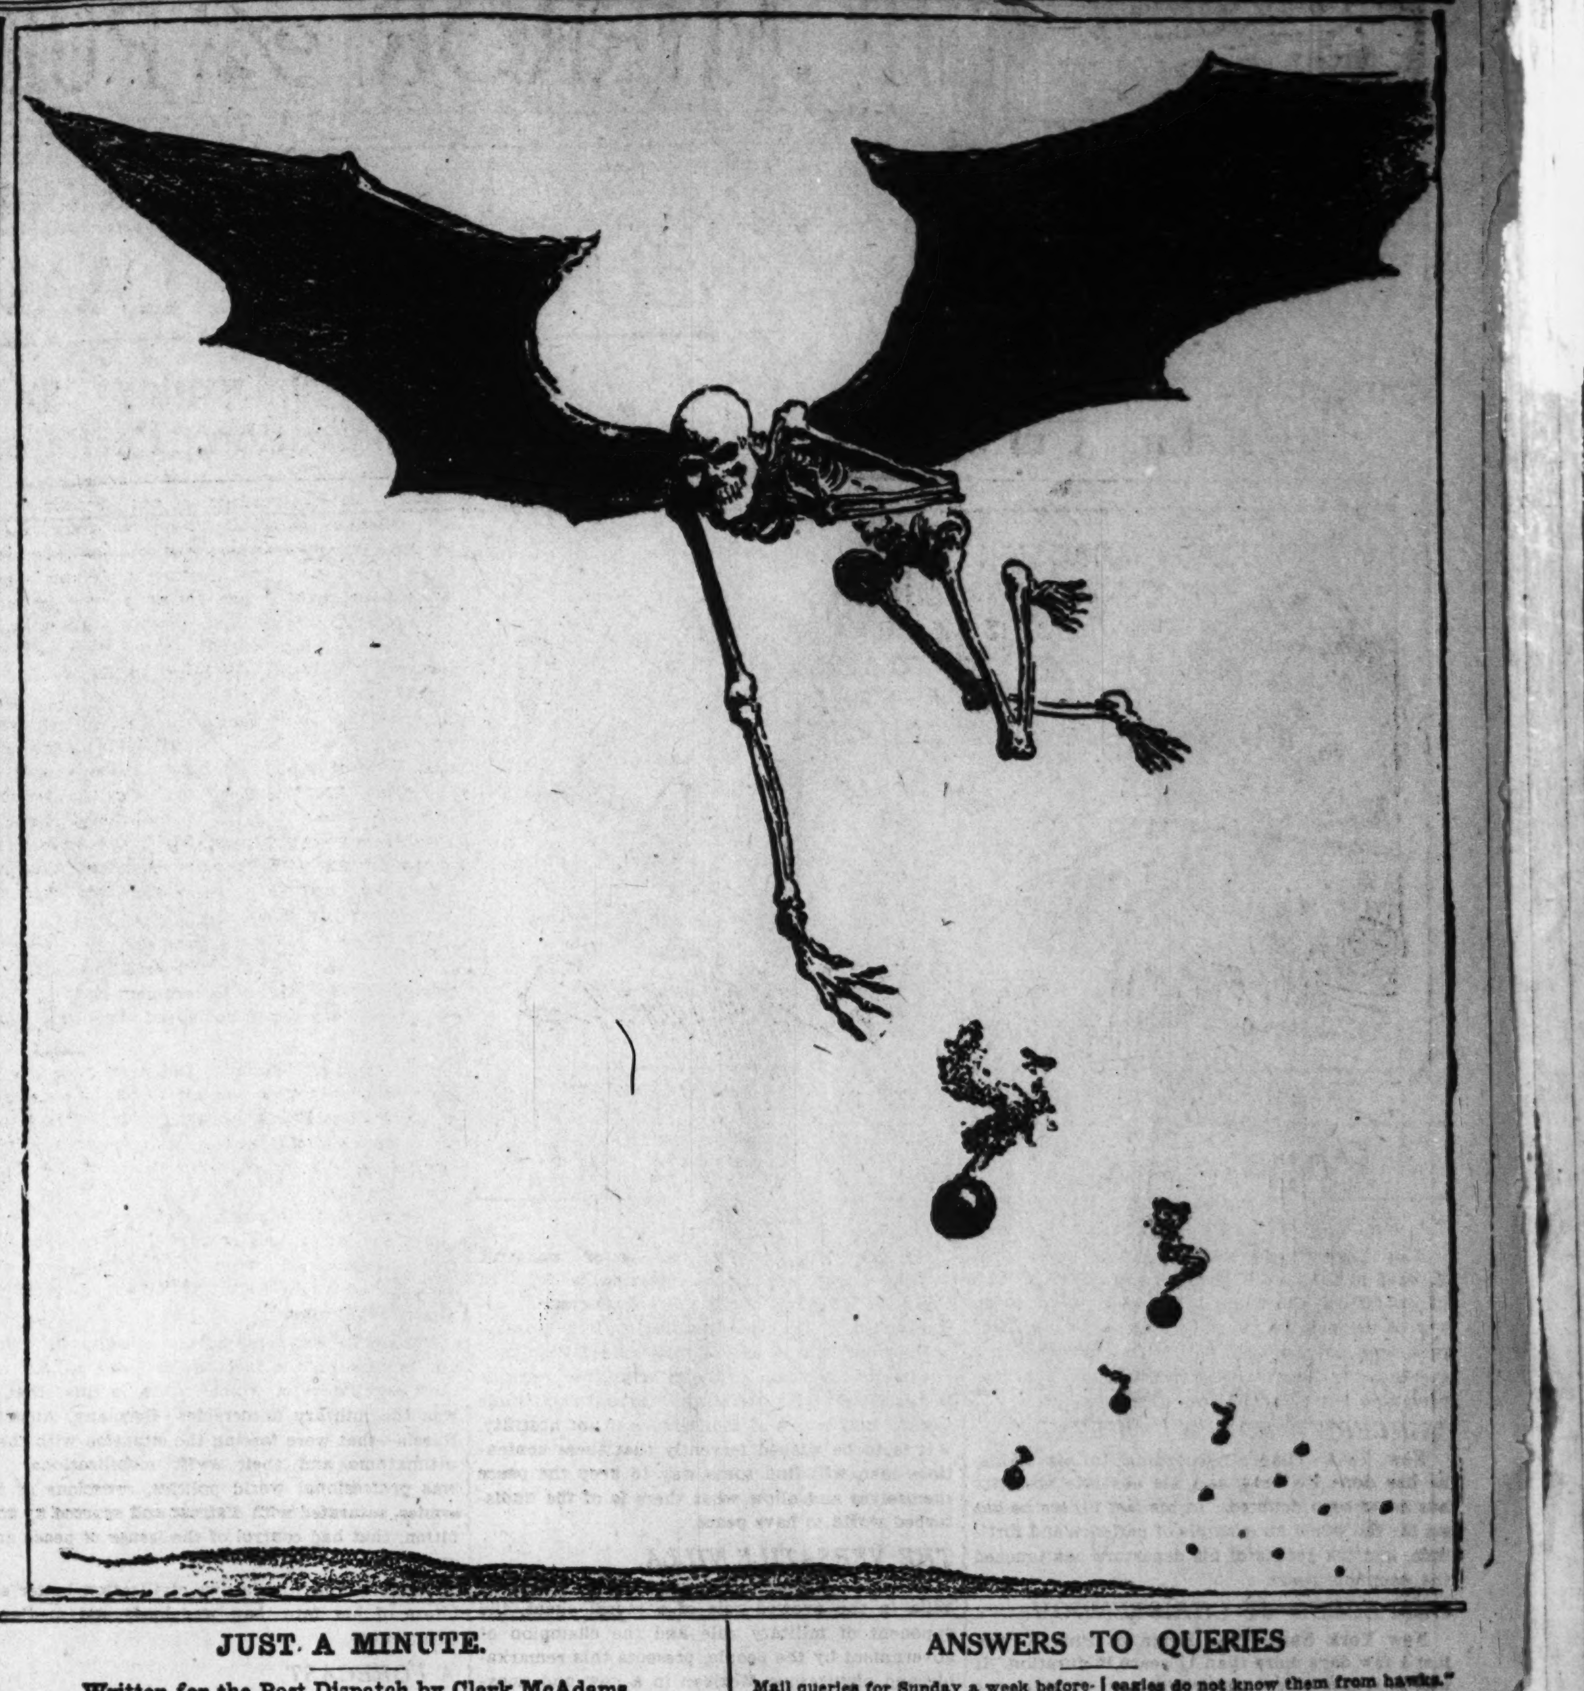
WHY THE SECURITIES BILL FAILS.

The bill requiring the Interstate Commerce Commisson to approve and authorize issues of railway securities, and to fix a minimum price at which each such issue shall be sold, has been sidetracked. It will not be pressed for passage at this session, and in its present form it will never pass. It fails not so much because it puts on the commission a job for which it is not ready, and won't be until the value of the railroad properties has been ascertained, as because it would effectually destroy the jurisdiction of State Railroad Commissions over railroad securities. This is something for which the state's rights Democrats of the South are not willing to vote, now that their attention has been called to it.



JUST A MINUTE.

Written for the Post-Dispatch by Clark McAdams.

SEPTEMBER.

September was the seventh month in the Roman year, and gets its name from the Latin septem (seven). When Germanicus had cleaned up the rest of Europe, he turned his attention to Rome, which had backed out of the Triple Alliance. The Roman army was for the most part in grand opera, and before it could get home Germanicus had bagged the country and established himself as the head of an empire which extended from the Baltic Sea to the Mediterranean. Everything went smoothly for a while. The Belgae, who had jumped Germanicus when he marched through their country to get at the Gauls, were busted; the Helvetians had not yet discovered what hit them, and the Triple Entente was still in the repair shop. Germanicus thought that so great a name as his own ought not to perish, so he followed the example of Julius and Augustus Caesar and inserted it in the calendar. Probably nothing would have come of this had he exercised a little discretion, but when he announced that September would thereafter be known as the month of Germanicus, he started something that with all his military genius and his tremendous resources he could not stop. The name of September was not only dear to the civilized world, which had incorporated it in a great many beautiful poems and tender songs, but organized labor saw in the imperial edict a ruse to do away with Labor day, which came on the first Monday. This settled it, and when Germanicus was found dead in bed with a bloody sign, "Votes for Women!" pinned to the bedpost, the name of September was restored and that of Germanicus was everywhere expunged. Since then no one has cared to tamper with the original name in any way, and it comes to us through the centuries without change in a single letter.

The hosts of autumn shall advance
Upon the doodlebugs and flies,
And what is happening in France
Shall happen right before our eyes.
The migrant scouting down the sky
Shall mark the fortress and the town,
The hunter with a watchful eye
Shall do his best to bring him down.
The warlike chigger shall succumb
To foemen he has long defied,
The pheasant rolling on his drum
Shall keep the conquerors in stride.
The oyster and the punkin pie
Shall put the cantaloupe to flight,
And the festive calf shall all but die
Of mingled happiness and fright.

The startled hired man shall bawl for thicker armor on his bed, and dying army worms recall how valiantly they fought and bled. The crowd around the soda fount shall down a stimulant and fly, the winds of Boreal shall mount their whistling chargers in the sky, the frog shall throw intrenchments up and dig a safe place in the mud, the frost shall stalk the buttercup and make the morning glory scud, the sumach with its war paint on shall hold the summit of the hill, the quail shall terrify the dawn with uttering a martial trill, the summer girl shall break the vows she made with 20 men to wed, and the soft peace velvet on the cows shall turn a military red.

Ye hosts of happiness to be, press on till we shall hail thee blest. We long from Summer to be free that have a season been oppressed. The tyrant Sun shall be subdued, and all his counselors resign; the eye of vengeance is glued upon him all along the line. A taste of Paradise awaits beyond the desert and the dust, and through those dim but grateful gates we shall go joyously or bust. We've had our fill of Palm Beach suits, of mad dog scares and canvas pants; the bliss that Autumn constitutes is that for which our fancies dance. The Kaiser's men may kill the Czar's, the British navy may explode; the Serbs may smoke their bad cigars within the Emperor's abode. The Turks may win, it matters not; the Hollanders may lick them all; or Greece subsist on pickled Scot, we'll gain the pleasantries of Fall.

Beyond the borderland of bliss
We there shall see the harvest moon,
And thinking of that time and this
Shall thank our stars for such a boon.
The filmy haze that fills the skies
Shall render beautiful the days,
The beauty spread before our eyes
Shall lend enchantment to our ways.
The cider press shall groan and whine
Its woes upon the ears of men,
The wild goose going down the line
Shall sound its Klaxon now and then,
The poet's song shall be about
Those things which all of us have felt,
And plain suspenders shall step out
And snatch the trousers from the belt.

September will give us a very good idea of why our forebears left Europe, some of them suddenly. It is probably the best place in the world to be from. Coming direct from that warlike continent, our forebears had little difficulty taking this one away from the Indians, and they established here what was designed to be a permanent refuge from just what is going on over there now. A good deal has been said of our forebears in a patriotic and military way, but little has been said of them mentally. Now is a good time to consider whether their heads were mere loafing places for wigs. The war will continue throughout September, and probably by the end of the month all the countries that are going to fight will have gotten into the ring. Meanwhile our own army and navy will mobilize around our neutrality, and if any of the warring Powers gets that away from us it will be because it could pull on it harder that way than we could pull on it this. After the war our idea will be so popular that pretty nearly everybody over there will come over here. This is the life.

At any rate, the gentle art
Of peace has sadly gone to pot,
And rests in peace, the world apart,
Unless awakened by a shot.
It was a pretty thing with which
To play while armament was made,
While kings grew powerful and rich,
And keels of battleships were laid.
A man, we find, is much the same
Today as when the world was new;
A tailor cannot make him tame,
Nor any course he may pursue.
He always killed his fellow man
In season, just like ducks and geese
And when the time comes ties a can
To all such theories as peace.

BEAUTY CULTURE.

MRS. E. H. H.—After nursing and the glands are enlarged there is nothing that will restore the plumpness of youth; wear a low-cut corset, carry yourself erect with chin up and shoulders well back.

HEALTH HINTS.

W. K. T.—Scotoma is a defect in the field of vision. It is not a disease of itself, but merely a symptom, and is characterized by sudden flashes of light, which are perceptible whether the eye be closed or open. The sensation is referred to the brain, but the patient not only seems to perceive it there, but also complains of flickering inside and outside the eye. In certain instances the defect may be transferred from one eye to the other. The symptom is either transitory or chronic, sometimes lasting for months or years. The disturbance may extend only over the immediate vicinity of the object under observation, or it may involve a larger area. Scotoma is either the expression of a disease of the eyeball, or of the optic nerve, or of the brain; or it may exist without any organ being involved. As an example of the latter condition, reference may be made to the flickering noticed in front of the eyes before a fainting spell. A scotoma involving both eyes, and extending over almost the entire visual field, renders the patient practically blind for the time being. This condition is called "flittering scotoma," and may be followed by headache and vomiting. Notwithstanding its disagreeable features, the affection is nevertheless free from danger. It is generally the result of mental overexertion, general nervous weakness, or anemia. Very often it appears as an accompanying symptom of migraine.—Standard Family Physician.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

WEBSTER GROVES.—Grape wine: Ripe, freshly picked and selected grapes, 20 lbs.; put into stone jar and pour over them 6 quarts boiling soft water; when sufficiently cool to allow it, squeeze thoroughly with the hand, after which allow to stand three days on the pomace, with a cloth thrown over jar, then squeeze out the juice and add 10 lbs. nice crushed sugar; let remain in jar a week longer; then take off the scum, strain and bottle, leaving a vent until done fermenting, when strain again and bottle tight, laying bottles on the side in cool place. See Answers Au. 6.

THE EAGLE PROTECTED.

MISSOURI GAME.—Sec. 6515 of the Missouri law says: "The English or European house sparrow, goshawk, Cooper's hawk, sharp skinned hawk, great horned owl, crow and crow blackbird (the bronzed grackle), are not included among the birds protected by this article." The eagle, therefore, is protected. It is not a game bird, and there is no season for killing it. Section 6509 says: "No person shall, within the State of Missouri, kill or catch, or have in his possession, living or dead, any wild bird other than a game bird, except as provided in this article." Section 6513 legalizes the killing of birds for scientific purposes. Therefore, eagles may only be killed by persons carrying a special State permit as taxidermists. The common Missouri practice of killing an eagle at every opportunity is not only illegal, but is rapidly exterminating in the wilder parts of the State none other than the national bird, which almost never does any harm. The bald eagle, which we have in Missouri, almost entirely subsists on fish. A member of the Cuivre Island Club who is a naturalist says: "The bald eagle we have always with us, and so far from doing harm it affords the rare spectacle of the greatest and noblest of our birds flying about as perhaps no other bird can fly. In spite of the old legends about eagles carrying off children, pigs, chickens and goodness knows what, the eagles at our place seem wholly to subsist upon fish, and we have never known one of them to eat either a baby, a pig or a chicken. Last winter, while hunting ducks on the island, I saw six bald eagles patiently sitting on a single tree a short distance away waiting until I should get away and they could get back to their fishing. There were children, pigs and chickens available in the country about, but the eagles did not disturb any of them. People who relate these things of eagles do not know them from hawks."

MISCELLANEOUS.

FRANK.—Irish was the language which, before the English conquest, was spoken all over Ireland, and is still spoken in many parts of the country, though since the time mentioned and especially the seventeenth century, it has been gradually giving place to the English language. Recently, however, many persons zealous in the cause of Ireland and believing that the disappearance of the language has been a potent agency in dissolving the unity of the country, have made earnest efforts to revive it, with the result that Irish is now taught in many of the public and private schools of Ireland. Enthusiasm has even extended to this country, where many classes for instruction in Irish have been established under the auspices of various associations.

M. C.—The airbrake (Westinghouse) was first used in April, 1869. The train selected was the Steubenville accommodation, between Pittsburg and Steubenville, O. When the train was going at full speed, suddenly, as he came around a sharp curve, the engineer saw a stalled wagon in the middle of the track dead ahead. With hand brakes only, nothing could have prevented a terrible smashup. The formal time for the trial of the air brake had not come, but the brake was there, and, in desperation, not believing for a moment that the thing could possibly avail, the engineer threw on the air. But it did avail. The observers in the rear were almost catapulted out of their seats by the shock of the sudden stop. But when they saw the engine fairly poking its nose into the wagon bed, so narrow had been the margin between safety and disaster, they forgot all about their shock.

TRYING TO KEEP HIS BALANCE — MORGAN IN PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER

Pope Pius X

"A FRUIT OF THE WAR."

New York World: The death of Pope Pius X, head of the vast Roman Catholic Church, with its 240,000,000 adherents, is an early fruit of the war of the nations. A man nearing his eightieth year does not look forward to long life, but unquestionably sorrow shortened the days of the venerable Pontiff. The war killed him.

"SINCERITY NEVER DOUBTED."

New York Times: According to his lights, he has done his best, and his absolute sincerity has never been doubted. In his last illness he has set for the world an example of patience and fortitude, and the pathos of his departure has touched the common heart.

RESPECTED BY CHRISTENDOM.

New York Sun: The Reign of Pius X was just a few days more than 11 years in duration. It was a term of stress and tribulation, to which the Pope showed himself equal at least in courage and will power. He will not rank among the great wearers of the triple crown, but he will live in history as one who gained the respect of Christendom in his own day and left his impress strongly upon his time.

IMPRESS ON AMERICA.

Brooklyn Standard Union: American Catholics will always remember his reign as marked by the removal of the United States from missionary jurisdiction and by an increase in the number of American Cardinals; and in the history of the church it will be notable for his action in abolishing the right of veto over the election of a Pope, so long possessed by certain European Governments, and which by canceling the election of Cardinal Rampolla had indirectly caused the elevation of Pius X himself.

ELECTING A POPE.

Pittsburg Press: The world has witnessed the spectacle in the last few days of Cardinals of all continents and countries dropping the business on hand, without regard to its importance, and hurrying to Rome to discharge there the supreme task of choosing at an early date Pope Pius' successor. The assembling of the conclave is ordinarily regarded as a momentous event throughout Christendom, and even in competition with the tremendous scenes now being staged in the theater of war is watched with the keenest interest.

It seems exceedingly improbable that an American will be the choice of the Sacred College for the pontifical honor. Some day the prophecy that an American will preside over the destinies of the Roman Catholic Church may be fulfilled, but there does not seem to be any expectation that so remarkable an innovation will be witnessed at the present conclave. Nothing is harder to forecast than the decision of such a gathering. The election of the Pope who has just passed beyond was a great surprise to the world at large and even to the recipient of the honor himself. Always distinguished by humility, he would have renounced the election had he not been vigorously urged and persuaded that it was a call he was bound to obey. And now, while no person is popularly regarded as the likely choice of the Cardinals, it seems to be generally believed that the new Pope will be an Italian, but whether one of aristocratic birth such as Pope Pius' predecessor, or of lowly birth like Pope Pius himself, only the event will tell.

If another "peasant Pope" is called to rule over St. Peters', nobody will be able to mistake the significance of the election. It will be the great Roman church's affirmation of a personal ideal that the late Pontiff embodied in high degree. A son of the poor, heart to heart with them during all his priesthood, knowing, nobody better, how superior to outward show are the inward values of the human soul, he entered the Vatican the most unassuming master it ever received. Simple, kindly, fixed in his attachment to time-tested beliefs, with not a particle of personal vanity but intensely jealous of the church's dignity and function, he went through serenely a difficult and sorrowful career in the loneliest office in the world, by his loveableness of character commanding universal esteem.

Villa

VILLA'S ATTITUDE.

Chicago Tribune: The real test of "watchful waiting" now approaches. Mexico is full of threats. Villa's attitude toward Carranza and the faction of the Constitutionalists in possession of Mexico City is one of undisguised suspicion. He has had no part in the triumph, but remains in the North with his army. Carranza's attitude toward him is one of indifference if not hostility.

It is to be wished fervently that these contentious men will find some way to keep the peace themselves and allow what there is of the undisturbed world to have peace.

THE VERSATILE VILLA.

Indianapolis Star: The sudden appearance of Villa in the avowed role of a moral agent, the opponent of military rule and the champion of government by the people, presents this remarkable and picturesque Mexican in a new and unexpected light.

If ever there was a man who was an illustration of the fighting spirit it was Villa as he has figured in his native land previous to this time. First a marauder and a bandit on his own account, he entered the civil war in his country seemingly because he liked to fight and not because he was interested in the war issues. All the reports of his conduct in the field showed him to be savage, cruel—a veritable butcher.

Now the transformation goes still further and he announces himself as an exponent of peace and the quiet life. If he is really speaking for himself there is reason to suspect that under provocation his course will be something like that of Ferrovius, the early Christian in George Bernard Shaw's play of "Androcles and the Lion," a giant who lamented that because of his wicked, devilish temper he could not always be meek and lowly and who, when tossed into the arena, forgot the role of martyr and killed six gladiators with great ease and with much joy.

Villa is interesting as a preacher of peace, but if affairs do not go to please him it need surprise no one to see him go on the warpath and try to enforce it with guns.

VILLA FOR PEACE.

Pittsburg Leader: The statement just issued from Chihuahua by Gen. Villa covering his relations with, and intentions toward, the Carranza government is overflowing with significance. Coming from Villa, it may be taken to mean exactly what it says. And coming from a man of everyday horse sense, who never had any claims to the accomplished lies and deceits of the cultured in statecraft and diplomacy, it may be taken as something by which Villa is ready to stand. It is the first genuine, patriotic utterance from any man prominent and influential in Mexican affairs.

Briefly, Gen. Villa says it is high time the people of Mexico have a say in running the country. He declares there must be an end to military government, or any government with a foundation in an army, or a regime that depends upon an army to force its will upon country and people. He says in a few terse, vigorous words, that the military must be secondary to the civil government, in fact and in theory. He bluntly says the military government always has been and will continue to be, administration for a select clique, not for the common good. In future, declares this patriot, the reverse must be the rule.

Read completely, this means, though Gen. Villa does not put it into words, that unless the new Government, under Carranza, is such an institution, he is on the ground and will give the people of Mexico popular rule.

From what is known of the man, there is no reason to doubt that he will do as he hints without hinting. Everything that has come out of Mexico indicates that while Villa may be uneducated, untrained in statesmanship and its cunning, he is a man of sound common sense, who knows black from white, and is the most practical man, perhaps, in the unhappy country.

At his worst, he is the only man who has raised a hand to actually do something practical for the relief of the common people. And that, in such a crisis, entitles him to the highest consideration. A son of the people, he may be expected to stand by the common man at this crucial transition.

Side Issues of the Great War

THE "WHITE BOOKS."

Chicago Tribune: Read the so called "white books" of the German and British Governments. There are recorded the elaborate tactics of diplomacy in search of peace. Yet behind this anxious effort of statesmen seems to move unseen the terrible hand of destiny, inexorable, pitiless, urgent. Often the negotiations would seem to be within a hair's breadth of success. At the next move they would be entangled hopelessly. At all times, to us who read in the cool detachment of our American situation, there was every reason for hope, yet always there was this headlong pressure toward war. The Austrian diplomacy seems exigent, arrogant. Her demands were an ultimatum with a time limit so short as almost to preclude anything but flat refusal or instant acceptance. England was begging for time, but Russia was mobilizing, and Germany knew that time was her most dangerous foe. So the crisis rose and swept toward its climax with the irresistible speed of a hurricane. Unquestionably on the side of the diplomatic exchange the Germans have the worst of it. The methods of the Austrian King were not merely stern, they gave ample excuse for the belief that she sought war, that her spirit was drastically aggressive, and that she did not wish to find a way out.

On the other hand, the facts as to the extent of Russian mobilization are not yet known. If they were what the German Government believed them to be, Germany dared not spend time upon negotiations.

Did statecraft blunder? Did Austria get out of hand long enough to commit herself and her ally fatally? Was Russia plotting to force the issue? Were both sides finessing until it was too late? Was either side or both sides determined to fight from the first?

History may determine some or all of these questions. If it does so it will decide not upon the allegations of "white books," but upon the evidence of forces active for many years in the affairs of Europe.

Meanwhile we in republican America will have our opinion on the facts we are able to see, the most significant of which, to us, is this: that it was the military autocracies—Germany, Austria, Russia—that were forcing the situation with their ultimatums and their swift mobilizations. It was professional world politics, conscious of its armies, saturated with distrust and spurred by ambition, that had control of the issues of peace and war.

Germany and Russia owe civilization better arbiters of her fate than war lords and medieval Chancellors.

A FORECAST.

New York Globe and Commercial Advertiser: The German strength is now at the maximum. Henceforth there will be a positive if not a relative decline. As the best prepared nation in Europe, it is obviously to Germany's interest to throw her full strength in the first blow. On the other hand, the allies will steadily grow in strength. France is, of course, armed, like Germany, almost to her last man, but the potential military resources of Great Britain and her colonies are practically untouched. Not a half or a quarter of the military power of Russia is yet available. Time, as every military expert of Germany acknowledges by acts if not by words, fights on the side of the allies. Germany must crush France during the next few weeks if she is to do it at all.

NONCOMBATANTS.

Cleveland Plain Dealer: The eldest boy in a childish, unformed hand, wrote, "Leopold de Belgique," and his younger brother signed himself "Charles Theodore de Belgique."

They were King's sons. Into a Brussels soup distribution they went, some days since, two little boys with white, serious faces, very quietly. They were dressed in sailor suits and wore little rosettes of black, yellow and red that could be bought in the streets for a penny. They solemnly tasted the soup and pronounced it good. Then they signed their names in the autograph book.

Pivoted upon two boys sat for a moment all the woe of Belgium. Their father was in the field, fighting, as it afterward turned out, with superhuman bravery against irresistible might. Heavy hearted in their very infancy from the cruelties of unbounded militarism, they stood pledged in their day of succession, to maintain the same despoiler of homes. Theirs was the noblesse; the obligation thundered at that moment from the terrible iron mouths of Liege.

Kinder, but harder; less bloody, but requiring a new kind of courage, is the modern lot of women and children in war. In the Thirty Years' War, which ravaged Germany as no war has ever ravaged any country before or since, every fighting unit of 50,000 men was accompanied by a disorganized rabble of 150,000 old men and children, wives and worse. If they suffered the hardships of the troops, at least they drew some inspiration from their nearness to brave men in action, from the shock and hurtle of bayonet and sword.

On the terrible retreat from Kabul in 1842, the tragic conclusion of Britain's first Afghan war, 10,000 camp followers of every kind perished with the troops, frozen to death or decimated by the kinder knives of the Ghilzais.

Civilization has saved a more exquisite woe for the dependents of soldiery. One final glance into the room where the babies lie sleeping, little arms tossed over curly heads in pleasant dreams, one last kiss for the faithful wife, and the hussar speeds to the bugle call. But for her and them, only the long wait and the lifelong sorrow; only what there has always been for the mothers of the race, in one form or another, the harder part.

AMERICA'S DUTY.

Philadelphia Ledger: Stop, look and listen! This is not a game. The passions of millions are aroused. We must make no move to imperil our sacred trusteeship. Better no commerce at all than a policy which may shatter the foundations of our neutral status. There must be at Washington a calmness, a deliberation, a slowness of policy that will assure the maintenance of our position. Cool heads are at a premium. The awful responsibility with which destiny has burdened us must be accepted. We bear the white man's burden and the yellow man's and the brown man's.

The whole weight of civilization rests here—to be protected, preserved and fostered. Never in the history of the world was a Government charged with a more solemn task.

Our Government must stand steady. It must push aside all radicalism and attune its conservatism to the unparalleled world situation. It, speaking for the American people, is the only great, calm voice left, a voice to which millions will look for comfort when at last it is heard above the thunders of the guns.

MAY SETTLE NOTHING.

Washington Times: This war will settle nothing elemental, because the elemental things cannot be settled; that is, the inevitable conflicts between races and religions and types of civilization.

The children of the next generation will read of this war in much the same kind of books that have told other children of other wars; books that will paint the glories and grandeurs and forget the horrors. They will not read much about the economic crime of it all. They will be told its stories by parents always eager to impress the glories of their own services.

The other day there came from Brussels a paragraph in a news dispatch which suggested much in this connection. It stated that the Boy Scouts were being used by thousands to build trenches, handle messages, and the like; in fact, they were pressed into every service for which they were comptent. And the dispatch added: "How the boys do love it all!"

Of course they do, for they are the same kind of humans that boys have always been. This experience of the Boy Scouts is training the next generation into a love and admiration for military prowess, more effectively than the youth of any country has ever been taught those things before.

GOVERNMENT-OWNED SHIPS.

New York Sun: The question of interference with American shipping by the belligerents must be simplified by Government purchase and outright ownership. For the Government character of ships bought, say, from the German companies and placed under the United States flag could not be questioned by the Powers now at war. If these ships were to be transferred to private owners by this country it would always be possible for a belligerent to seize them on the high seas on the ground that the change in ownership was not bona fide. The United States Government's honor in making the purchase in the completest and most absolute form could not be disputed by any prize court or even by any naval officer of Great Britain, France or Russia.

Roosevelt and Hinman

HINMAN'S HERESIES.

Topeka State Journal: Colonel Roosevelt couldn't very well do anything else than withdraw his support of Harvey D. Hinman, a candidate for the New York Republican gubernatorial nomination, after Mr. Hinman had come out in a flat-footed announcement that he was opposed to the initiative and the referendum, the recall of judges and judicial decisions and woman's suffrage.

PROGRESSIVES HELP BARNES.

Washington Herald: William Barnes and his organization were given immeasurable aid by the New York Progressives in defeating Col. Roosevelt's plans a month before the primaries. In rejecting the Colonel's man Hinman as their candidate for Governor they may have been seeking to realize their cherished hope of compelling the Colonel to run himself, but they have effectually blocked the maneuvers through which he hoped to earn the credit for reuniting the Republicans of the Empire State. Hinman is out in the cold. The regulars will have none of him with the O. K. of T. R. and the N. G. of the Colonel's organization still sticking to him. If Col. Roosevelt does consent to run, which seems scarcely possible, the best he can possibly hope for is to run second in November. Any other candidate would be certain to land the Progressive ticket in third place, unless the field should be larger than that.

No eventuality will yield Col. Roosevelt any glory in the Empire State this year.

HINMAN TO BE PITIED.

Indianapolis News: It has been clear for some time that Hinman had no chance of winning the Republican nomination. The greatest objection to him was that he was favored by Roosevelt. The party did not relish the idea of taking its candidate at the hand of a man who did not even belong to that party. A bipartisan machine with Roosevelt at its head did not appeal to them. There was, therefore, nothing for Roosevelt to do but withdraw his indorsement of Hinman. The next Governor of New York will owe nothing to the big Moose, who will have to be content with the Progressive organization.

The campaign for the "third cup of coffee" has gone awry. Had it been possible to arrange matters so that Roosevelt could have claimed any credit for a victory this year in the great State of New York, the outlook for 1916 would have been cheering—perhaps. As it is now, the horizon is somewhat clouded. However, sympathy will just now be felt chiefly for Hinman. And yet it may be that the withdrawal of the Roosevelt indorsement will help him with the Republicans!

THE ROOSEVELT ECLIPSE.

Philadelphia Ledger: In New York Mr. Roosevelt has repudiated Mr. Hinman, and once more is astraddle the sadly emaciated Bull Moose. The attack of strabismus has passed. It was impossible to boss two political parties at the same time, even though one had nothing but a name and a few subordinate leaders left.

Why is it that the importance of Roosevelt has become so inconsequential? The roaring of the lion was of no interest to the sheep in Maine. They yawned or got no nearer than the war bulletins. Nobody seems to care who or what the great tribune of opportunism supports. The vocabulary of his excoriation is not exhausted. The old parties are still filled with bosses who must be driven out. There is not an ism that was capitalized in 1912 that is not just as good fly paper as ever. But the flies stay away. They will not be coaxed.

There are many reasons for the diminution of the Roosevelt hysteria. It is the war, however, that has eclipsed his star. Good citizens cannot help being thankful that there is not a war lord in the White House. The horror occasioned by the European catastrophe is deep-seated. The public deprecates war talk and its aversion extends to all who have become associated in the general mind with war. The blare of trumpets has lost its attractiveness. Most Americans believe that Roosevelt in the White House would have meant war with Mexico; most of them are sure that were he President the danger of our becoming embroiled in the cataclysm abroad would be far greater than it is. This implies a lack of confidence.

The fact that the war has kept Roosevelt off the front pages does not explain the clogging of his progress. The psychology of the times is against his advancement. He is the victim of events.

ROUGH RIDING.

Philadelphia Record: The Progressives had not liked Hinman from the first, and his refusal to bind himself to the Progressive party put them into a mutinous attitude toward Mr. Roosevelt's position. Twenty-one of the chiefs of the Progressive tribe visited Sagamore Hill and had an earnest pow-wow with the inventor and sole proprietor of the third party, at the conclusion of which he slammed his fist upon the table and snapped his jaws together and announced as follows: "I regard the judgment of the committee as excellent. I am heartily in favor of a straight Progressive ticket, and I will campaign the State from one end to the other to elect such a ticket." The political situation of his throat will permit this. "I am getting better all the time," says Mr. Roosevelt. "I never felt better in my life."

Mr. Whitman will probably be nominated by the Republicans. If Mr. Roosevelt shall take the field against him it will impair his chances of being persona grata before the next Republican national convention, and if Mr. Whitman should be elected he would become a formidable candidate for the Republican nomination. It wouldn't be so rough riding two horses at once if they would only run in the same direction and at the same speed. It is a difficult task, but Mr. Roosevelt is doing it as well as anyone could.

Italy's Queen Likely to Decide Nation's Course

Though a Slav, Daughter of Montenegro's King and Reared in the Court of Russia, She Advises Her Consort to Do Only What She Considers Is the Best for Her Adopted Country and Adored Son the Future King.

By REBECCA INSLEY CASPAR.

Written Especially for the Post-Dispatch and New York World.

THE armies of the Triple Entente—Great Britain, Russia and France—are fighting those of two of the nations of the Triple Alliance—Germany and Austria—on the battlefield for supremacy in Europe.

Italy, the third partner in the Triple Alliance, has so far withstood the importunities of Germany and Austria, to take part in the war, refusing also to take sides against them. The diplomats of the great Powers, arrayed in opposite camps, are fighting to obtain her support. She cannot sit on the fence much longer. She must take the leap in the dark, to one combination or the other. Italy's decision may settle the fate of Europe.

ITALY'S policy toward the great Powers at this moment lies in a large measure with her Queen, a statement which may provoke an incredulous smile on this side of the Atlantic, where the citizens of the republic are unaccustomed to feminine influence in questions of high governmental import, but a statement which is, nevertheless, true.

Queen Elena has unusual influence upon her husband, King Victor Emmanuel. She can have the deciding voice with him if she cares to use it at such a critical time when there is so much to be said in favor of Italy's action, whether it be for or against her former allies of the Triple Alliance. The King rules under the restrictions of constitutional sovereignty, but he exercises a directing sway over his Cabinet, the Parliament and the people. The nation's present policy of neutrality is his personal policy, backed by Prime Minister Salandra, a newcomer in the Cabinet, and strenuously opposed by Foreign Secretary Di San Gualano, the strongest man of the Government, in office for several years, and openly friendly to the Triple Alliance.

The question of Italy's policy may be in the hands of the Queen—one says this, speaking figuratively. The hands themselves so thoroughly typify the character of the Queen that one could say it literally. They have the long, tapering fingers of a poetic temperament; strong, full of nervous energy, bearing the marks of constant use, not nourished and caressed things of beauty and protected from labor to be soft and white and useless; the busy hands of love and devotion, tirelessly at work from morn till night.

She Is Not Blindly Slavish.

WHILE the diplomats are playing their game at Rome, she must be listening to the dictates of her divided heart, undoubtedly seeking guidance from the God she has devoutly worshiped all her life, praying to be shown the path of duty. No diplomat of consequence in Europe is so ill informed as to thing that because she was born the daughter of King Nicholas of Montenegro and brought up at the court of Russia, whose Czar protects her father, she is unequivocally for the political cause of the Slavs.

She is not the tool of Russia, as has been stated, a political envoy of the great Slav empire which educated her and settled her upon a throne. She does not blindly obey the wishes of her father to use any and every means of persuasion upon her husband, the King, and his advisers to win Italy's influence for the Slav. She was born in the Slav race; she has married into the Italian.

She is the one Queen of Europe most ideally a true wife and mother. Her husband's interests rest safely in her keeping. She will never betray him that the Slavs may triumph. Her little son is Italian and the sovereignty of Italy will be his some day. His mother, bending over his bedside every night as she tucks in the coverlet with those busy, kind, practical hands, performing the sweet service which is honored by the lowly but often scorned by the high, is thinking these days of the future of her son, for the future of the Slav. One can rest assured that she is thinking of the Italian people also.

She has lived among them for 18 years and spent 11 of them after her marriage without going back to her old home in Montenegro, a comparatively short distance away and a land she loves. It was a sacrifice she had made to prove to her husband's subjects that she had come to dwell among them and remain as one of them and that her marriage did not mean that she was to be open to the predominating dictation of Russia in Montenegro. It was an action by which she told the Italians while she had been born and bred in the doctrines and dreams of the Slavs, she would not sacrifice the Italian people for these doctrines and dreams. She risked her life to succor her husband's people after the earthquake at Messina, true to the end in this final test of love, so severe that Italy's Italian-born Queen, Margherita, shrank from it.

Russia's Ablest Diplomat There.

IF Italy makes a move now because the King urges and the Queen counsels, it will be solely because it seems best for the future power of the nation, not because it will give power to the Slavs. No greater wrong could be done to Queen Elena's gentle, steadfast nature than to believe that anything else could possibly be.

Russia has sent as Special Ambassador to Rome, Count Witte, once Prime Minister, one of its most liberal statesmen and probably the one most acceptable to Italy. He was conveniently passing along that way on his return home from Biarritz. He has no public instructions, hence is not officially called a Special Ambassador.

By a strange coincidence France's Minister of Foreign Affairs and her arch-conspirator with Russia against Germany, Theophile Delcasse, conveniently found himself in Rome at the same time. One could safely gamble that their secret instructions are to win Italy from the Triple Alliance and try to do it by paying court to Italy's Queen. In the finished accomplishments of statecraft these two have few peers and perhaps no superiors in the Europe of today. Both of them have been using their arts of flattery and cajolery upon Queen Elena for years without the slightest success.

Oct. 14, 1903, the informal articles of international agreement between Great Britain and France which we know as the Entente Cordiale were signed in London. Delcasse, then the Minister of Foreign Affairs, viewed with satisfaction the document bringing into existence the alliance for which he had patiently and assiduously worked through a period of several years, to obtain which he had prostrated himself before England and humiliated France in the Fashoda complication for the humiliation of Germany. One might expect that Delcasse would take more than the usual amount of time in contemplating this particular document on its day of signature.

He could not on Oct. 14, 1903, because he had something of even graver importance to attend to. The King and Queen of Italy arrived in Paris upon that day. The visit had been brought about through the skillful maneuvering of Delcasse and it was a triumph of his diplomatic genius. It marked the close of the enmity which had existed between France and Italy from 1888 when Italy's celebrated Prime Minister, Crispi, had signed the Triple Alliance at the instigation of Bismarck.

In the estimation of France, Crispi was the "Satan of the Italian drama" and as long as he lived, which was close up to the year 1903, Germany used Italy as a menace to France. Delcasse accomplished the negotiations for the royal visit to Paris soon after Crispi's death, being careful to insist upon Queen Elena accompanying the King.

Flattery Aided the Triumph.

SHE did not care to come. He insisted, giving out an interview to be copied into the Italian papers, in which he said that Paris had received the Czarina of Russia in company with the Czar when His Majesty had come for an official visit and that the city would not be content unless it were given the privilege of paying the same honor and homage to Italy's Queen.

The young Princess Elena of Montenegro, protage of Czar Alexander II and his consort, so captivated their hearts that they longed to have her as their daughter-in-law. The Russian statesman approved, as it would give a bride from the Slavs to Nicholas II, the future Czar, and a future Czarina from the race to the Russian people.

The young man himself spoiled their plans by falling in love with Princess Alix of Hesse and insisting upon marrying her, doing his utmost afterward to make a brilliant marriage for Princess Elena and offering her, in brotherly fashion, a dowry of a million roubles, which the bridegroom, the heir to the Italian throne, would not allow the bride to accept. Elena never manifested any regret because she did not become Czarina. She would have been more than human, however, if Delcasse's insistence that she come to Paris in the same manner as the Czarina had not accomplished its purpose.

Paris found her enchanting and told her so. Delcasse allowed his impassive countenance to assume the semblance of a smile. The whole nation took on an attitude of satisfaction when Victor Emmanuel, speaking at the state banquet given in his honor, said: "France rightly considers my presence in Paris the natural result of that work of rapprochement happily accomplished between two countries.

French Statement Is Frank.

IT was a declaration of Italian policy which had been carefully prepared by the Government at Rome and spoken by the King in exactly the words agreed upon by the Cabinet. The French press was open and above board in stating the desires of its Government. The official statement was:

"The hope is that the results of this visit and the one in return, which President Loubet is to make, will crystallize in an arbitration treaty between France and Italy like the one significantly signed in London today between England and France."

From Paris the Italian King and Queen went across to London, conveyed in the English Royal Yacht Victoria and Albert. They were welcomed at Portsmouth by the Prince of Wales—now King George—and when they reached the Windsor Station, King Edward and Queen Alexandra were there to meet them, as well as a dozen members of the royal family. Their hosts gave a state banquet at Windsor Castle, the tables set with gold plates and the 100 guests, including the principal ambassadors accredited at London, the Italian Ambassador being in the place of honor.

The following year President Loubet and Foreign Secretary Delcasse were in Rome. Europe awaited Italy's change from the Triple Alliance to the Triple Entente. It seemed assured and diplomats in a position to know daily predicted it.

The Italian Government had come to a decision to make the change. The Emperor of Austria became so cordial that he went to the length of inviting the King of Montenegro to visit him in Vienna, and went to the station to meet him, an act of politeness he had never paid to any other ruler, hoping by this excess of courtesy to win over the influence of Queen Elena to preserve the Triple Alliance.

Kaiser's Friendship Powerful.

IT was preserved but by the friendship between the Kaiser and the Queen, due to that one homely and old-fashioned virtue which William II possesses as an advantage over his diplomatic adversaries.

In 1909 the Russian Czar braved the terrors of possible assassination by the Italian anarchists and paid the King and Queen an unconventional visit at their country home, Racconigi. He was attended by State officials from St. Petersburg and the Cabinet from Rome journeyed to Racconigi to meet them. Europe was sure, this time, that Italy would join the Triple Entente. She did not because the Kaiser prevented it.

Since that time Austria has treated Italy very badly on the Adriatic when she was at war with Turkey in Tripoli, and Italian indignation has been aroused to fever heart in the old enmity. But one must remember that alliance with unfriendly Austria has been better for Italy than open hostility and one must remember that Queen Elena and Kaiser William II are good friends.

CARDINALS MUST DECIDE FOR POMP OR SIMPLICITY

THE conclave of the Cardinals which will meet in Rome this coming week to elect a successor to Pius X will have to decide upon a point of church policy before it can come to an agreement as to which of their number is to wear the triple crown of St. Peter. It concerns the continuation of the extreme simplicity which characterized the regime of the late Pope, or the return to the pomp and splendor which had always been considered indispensable to the dignity of any sovereign's court, but especially by the pontifcal sovereign and the cardinal princes of the Roman church, until Pius X was elected. He was a man of the people who had no desire for the highest office in the gift of his church, taking it with a sad heart in response to the demands of the College of Cardinals which found him to be the only member its members could agree on. He positively declined to assume the sovereign role with sovereign ceremonial and magnificence.

His simplicity made many friends for his church outside its ranks. But the question has long been agitated if it did not cause a certain loss of prestige for the church and whether Catholicism would not be seriously endangered among the aristocracy of the monarchial countries if this simplicity were long continued. The consensus of opinion among the high dignitaries seems to be that the church of Rome needs a pontifical sovereign in the Papal Palace who will return to the old ideas.

The famous Pio Nino (Pius IX), who deserted the Quirinal upon the approach of Victor Emmanuel II, kept up the ceremonials of pomp and pageantry which were the glory of Europe as well as the glory of Rome. In his day every man and woman who sought recognition in the Society of the Holy City knew that it was necessary to attend the Papal audiences, sitting humbly in the antechamber for three or four hours.

He used to make a wonderful progress through the streets upon Christmas eve. After the clanging of a thousand bells from all the belfries of Rome, the gala carriages left the Vatican, carrying the Pontiff and his suite for the midnight mass at St. Maria Maggiore, the Swiss guards surrounding the carriages and filling the streets, their helmets and long halberds shining beneath the torches, the members of the papal household wrapped in Spanish mantles over their black satin clothes, high ruffs and the heavy gold chains about their necks.

Pomp Within the Vatican.

LEO XIII, Pio Nino's successor, was a man of the same temperament and ideas and in his early days he played much the same role as the supreme head of society as well as of the church, even though confined within the boundaries of the Vatican. This is the largest palace in the world, with more than 1000 rooms. Its park lies so hidden in forest depths that it shelters a villa into which the Pope can move when summer comes and he needs a change to country air. It is said that upon its piazza an army of 20,000 men could be drawn up. The Pope, in other days, made state appearances there before the multitude of many thousands of kneeling subjects. Leo XIII, technically "prisoner of the Vatican," maintained a regal court within its boundaries.

As all of the officials of the church went into mourning for the loss of the temporal power of the court, his court became known as the "black court." That of the King at the Quirinal was known as the "white court." Leo XIII set his decree sternly against the mingling of the two and their representatives were strictly personna non grata the one to the other. He demanded also that the Cardinals live in state, according to their position as Princes of the church.

Pius X let it become known soon after his accession that he would not be displeased if the two courts met at the same houses. Today the Roman aristocracy of the "black court" openly complains: "There is no longer any society of the Vatican," and the "blackest of the black" appear at so many of the "white" houses that they are humorously spoken of as "gray." The ladies of honor of the Queen dance with the Papal diplomats at a dozen balls during the winter season.

The College of Cardinals must decide, if they can, whether or not this is to continue or whether the new Pope shall return to the policy of society at the Vatican, among other things which Pius X discarded.

Fighting Man Who Fitted Britain's Navy for War

Winston Churchill, Recent Liberal Convert From the Conservatives, Has Won Praise From Long-Time Political Enemies by His Proof of Prepardness for the Great Conflict That to Most Persons Was Unexpected.

By ALEXANDER WENYON SAMUEL.

Written especially for the Post-Dispatch and New York World.

WHEN the British fleet moves into battle its efficiency will be the expression of a very real American contribution to Great Britain. For it has been recreated and perfected into its present splendid shape by a man of genius whose blood is as American as British, perhaps even more so.

There have been a good many American brides in the family of the Dukes of Marlborough, and not the least in beauty and brains was Winston Churchill's mother, Miss Jennie Jerome of New York. When the late Lord Randolph Churchill brought his bride into London society she created a sensation by her beauty and her charm. His rapid advance in politics was helped a great deal by her social gifts. She took at once a premier place, which, unfortunately, her second marriage, with its disasters, did not help to maintain. Yet the fact that she has a son 40 years of age does not mean that she is off the active list in society and well-doing, not at all; and she is pretty certain to be organizing some campaign for the relief of the war now, as she did at the time of the Boer War.

BUT undoubtedly her chief claim to fame today is that she is the mother of Winston Churchill, England's First Lord of the Admiralty. For Winston Churchill has all the stamp of genius and high daring and has crowded as much into his 40 years as any man of his day. He has been through five wars; he has written seven books, one of them being the biography of his father, which ranks among the first half dozen in the British language; he was first elected to the House of Commons as a Conservative, but has been a Liberal Minister of the crown for nearly nine years, and he has proved himself one of the most active and powerful as well as sagacious and far-seeing of modern English statesmen.

He has journeyed in most parts of the world, spent long months in the saddle and by some process that must be called genius combines the literary style of a ripe scholar with the voracious habits of a man of action. This country he knows well, both by reason of his relationship and his visits here, especially his lecture tours, which he undertook after the Boer War, when 23 years old. As a lecturer he was a memorable success, and his picturesque personality is not forgotten by those who came in contact with him.

Natural Born Fighting Man.

THE key to his character is that he is a soldier. He is a natural born fighting man. He is a true Churchill, very different from his cousin, the present Duke of Marlborough, whose heir to the dukedom he was until the birth of the two sons of the present Duchess, the former Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt.

It is a curious thing that Lord Kitchener should be at the wars and Winston Churchill at the admiralty at a time when England is at war. It is curious because England was far more likely to have had a lawyer presiding over the army and a professor ruling the navy. For England never was ready with her fighting machines at the beginning of war in all her history. She always preferred to blunder through than to plan ahead. This time both her fleet and her army were ready and under the direction of the two best men in the empire for the purpose.

Winston Churchill has been at the admiralty for about three and a half years, and the other day his old enemy, Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, walked across the floor of the House of Commons and shook hands with him, saying he was proud of his work there and wished their feud dead. And the praise was deserved.

Churchill has an infinite capacity for work and grasps swiftly and with splendid breadth. Here is a little story for which I can vouch: After he had been at the admiralty about three weeks he had occasion to draw up a memorandum relating to a super-dreadnaught. Now, a super-dreadnaught is about as complicated a machine as ever man devised. Very few of the officers know more than their own individual ends of it. After he had completed the memorandum he handed it to Admiral Troubridge to lock over, asking him to correct any technical errors. Admiral Troubridge, accustomed to the amateur that political exigency usually thrusts into such great offices, took it away to examine. Then was Dull Season Is About Over and With the Many Notable Weddings Scheduled Society Is Preparing to Enjoy a Lively Fall—Debutantes of the Year Are Unusually Beautiful.

By Frances Cabanne Scovel.

THESE last days of August are the dullest in all the year, but shortly everybody will begin arriving in town from all corners of the world—that is true—and it won't be long before the social season will open.

There are fewer debutantes this year and more brides than we have had for a long time, so the weddings and their accompanying festivities will add much to the general gayety.

The debutantes are said to be the prettiest lot of girls who have "come out" for several seasons and there are several real beauties among them.

The invitations to the maids and matrons of honor for the Veiled Prophet's ball are out and it will be then that the buds will make their first appearance.

The ball will be the first Tuesday in October, as always, and will be even more brilliant than ever, according to rumor.

GERHARD SISTERS.

YESTERDAY Miss Violet Johnson and John Campbell Townsend were married at the home of the bride's parents, Lieut. and Mrs. David D. Johnson of Westport, N. Y.

The wedding is of more than ordinary interest in St. Louis, as the bride's mother was formerly Miss Anne Gratiot Chouteau, daughter of the late Charles P. Chouteau. Lieut. Johnson is a graduate of the United States Military Academy and retired from the army soon after his marriage. The Johnsons have a beautiful home in Westport, where they live the greater part of the year, going to New York, [illegible] Orleans or abroad for the winter. [illegible] Townsend is the son of Mrs. James Townsend of New York. He is a [illegible]uate of Yale in the class of '10 and his love affair with Miss Johnson dates to their school days, when the Townsend had a summer home in Westport. A number of St. Louisans, relatives of the bride, who are spending the summer in the East, were guests at the wedding. Among them were Mrs. Lucas Turner, who was Miss Lucille Chouteau, and whose marriage also took place at the Johnsons' home about five years ago; Mrs. Edward V. Papin, the bride's aunt, and Mr. Papin, who went from Rye Beach, N. H.; Mr. and Mrs. Gerald M. Borden of New York, and Misses Julia and Nancy Bates, from Lake Placid, N. Y. The bride made her debut in St. Louis about three seasons ago, when her parents came here and spent the winter at the Buckingham Hotel. She has since visited here, and was the guest of her aunt, Mrs. Edward V. Papin, in May. Mr. Townsend and his bride will make their home in New York.

ADDED to the list of debutantes for the coming season is that of Miss Mildred Papin Lloyd, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Lloyd of 5368 Maple avenue. Miss Lloyd is pretty and vivacious and has the charm for which the women of the Papin family have been known since St. Louis ended at Broadway and the fashionable residence district was near the levee. Her mother was formerly Miss Grace Papin, a younger sister of Mesdames Charles W. Benedict, Henry L. Haydel and William H. Walker.

Until about three years ago the Lloyds lived in Chicago.

THE marriage of Miss Anita Gordon Bailey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Valle Bailey of 5334 Westminster place, and James Verdin Smith, which took place quietly yesterday afternoon, was one of the notable ones of the season. The ceremony was at 5 o'clock at the home of the bridegroom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William J. Swift of 4355 West Pine boulevard, instead of at the bride's residence, because Mr. Swift's father is an invalid and otherwise could not have been present at his son's marriage. The Rev. Father Padberg, S. J., officiated and only the members of the two immediate families were present.

The arrangements were quite simple and the bride dispensed with a conventional wedding dress and wore a gown of white lace, a small white hat and a corsage bouquet of lilies of the valley. After a brief honeymoon trip Mr. Swift and his bride will make their residence on a houseboat, as Mr. Swift is a Government engineer doing work on the Mississippi River and its branches and their home will be one they can take with them wherever they go.

The bride is one of the most attractive girls in society and is related to the Valles and several of the pioneer families of St. Louis.

Fall Millinery Opening, Robinson's, 712 N. King's highway.

Dr. and Mrs. Walter Fischel, who have been staying with Mrs. Fischel's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Elliot, since their return from their wedding trip abroad, have taken an apartment at 5651 Waterman avenue and will move into it about Sept. 10. Mrs. Fischel was before her marriage Miss Virginia Elliot. Their tour in Europe was cut short on account of the illness of Dr. Fischel's father, Dr. Washington E. Fischel.

Mrs. James A. Maginnis of 4200 Westminster place and her daughter, Miss Ansuna Thompson Maginnis, who have spent the summer at Marblehead, Mass., are registered at Hotel Sommer, Boston.

Mrs. Thomas K. Peters of 5302 Lindell boulevard, and Miss Anna Ross have returned from a three weeks' trip in Colorado.

The marriage of Miss Anna Marie Reton and John J. Carroll took place last evening at 8 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Reton of 6036 Washington boulevard. The Rev. William J. Dames, a college friend of the bridegroom, performed the ceremony.

The home was beautifully decorated, the bridal party standing under an arbor of bride's roses and smilax.

The bridemaids were Miss Madelyn Christian, Miss Helen O'Brien. Messrs. Edward Cummings and William Howland were groomsmen.

Miss Madelyn Christian was gowned in pink and carried a bouquet of pink roses.

Miss Helen O'Brien was gowned in yellow and carried a bouquet of yellow sunburst roses.

The bride wore an embroidered silk lace gown and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. Among the flowers on her bridal veil was a spray of white heather from Scotland.

James Moodie played some violin selections and the Wedding March from Lohengrin. Only immediate friends and relatives were present.

Mr. Carrol and his bride departed later in the evening for New York by way of the Great Lakes.

They will be at home after Oct. 1 at 6036 Washington boulevard.

Miss Mildred Ehrengart of 3738 Page avenue returned this morning from Chicago where she spent several weeks.

On account of a recent bereavement in the family, the marriage of Miss Leona Sprake and Harold F. Hecker, next Saturday evening, will be a quiet affair, with only the nearest relatives present. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George T. Sprake of 5624 Bartmer avenue. The ceremony will be at the home of the bride.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Prufrock of the Buckingham Hotel, arrived in Bretton Woods, N. H., last Wednesday. Another St. Louis arrival there was Mrs. H. E. Farrell.

Dr. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S
Oriental Cream
OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash and Skin Diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 66 years, and is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no counterfeit of similar name. Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the hautton (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations." At Druggists and Department stores.

To Look Young Quickly for Special Occasion

How often have you fussed and puttered with your face on the eve of some important social event when you wanted too look your prettiest, and try what you would, you just couldn't get the desired result! Next time your face becomes unruly, exhibiting a careworn and saggy appearance, and crisscrossed with fine lines, here's something that will quickly transform it into one of youthful freshness.

Just get an ounce of powdered saxolite at your druggist's, mix this with about a half pint of witch hazel, and bathe your face in the solution for two or three minutes. Immediately after you feel a "firming up" of the skin and underlying tissue, which naturally irons out the little wrinkles, worry marks and flabbiness. The contour and general appearance of your face are so improved, you will be glad you heard of this simple and harmless method.—Adv.

EARLY HISTORY OF BELLEVILLE TO BE SEEN IN PAGEANT

350 Actors to Have Part in Production on Large Outdoor Stage in Park.

Belleville, Ill., a county seat city which is proud of its history, will celebrate that history by a pageant on the evenings of Sept. 15, 16 and 17. Thomas Wood Stevens, who wrote the book of the St. Louis Pageant and who drilled the actors in that production, is performing the same service at Belleville, and Joseph Solari of St. Louis, stage director of the St. Louis Pageant, is serving in the same capacity at Belleville.

Three hundred and fifty actors will appear in the Belleville pageant, which will be presented in the natural hillside amphitheater of Waterworks Park. The stage is 40 by 75 feet.

Especial attention has been given, Stevens says, to the developing of dramatic scenes. The love scene element, the lack of which in the St. Louis Pageant was criticised, is introduced in one of the Belleville pageant episodes, in which a hearing in court on a guardianship case is portrayed. The hearing ended in a marriage, and is shown as a sample of early court procedure in Illinois.

Protest Against Negro Sale.

The so-called founder of Belleville, George Blair, is not presented in an altogether flattering light in the pageant. He is shown as agreeing to give one lot in each city block to the county, but later when the location of these lots is shown, it appears that they are all in the center of the blocks, with no street or alley touching them, and no way of getting to them except through the lots retained or sold by Blair. This episode is treated in comedy fashion.

The large German population of Belleville is represented in a scene which shows an outbreak of protest, in 1853, against a proposal to sell a negro in Belleville. This was legally possible under an old law, which provided that a negro staying in the State a certain length of time might be fined $50, and sold if he did not pay the fine.

When the officials proceeded to carry out the sale, Gustavus Koerner, a leader among the German-born people, bid in the negro and freed him. Later, when he ran for the office of Lieutenant-Governor, Koerner's enemies accused him of having been a slaveholder. This charge reacted in his favor, when its cause was learned, and he was elected.

East St. Louis Has Scene.

A comedy scene in furnished by the inability of a one-time Belleville resident, a botanist of some note, to milk a cow from printed instructions. He held the book of instructions in one hand, while trying to milk with the other hand.

East St. Louis will have a scene in the Belleville pageant. It will relate to the efforts of John B. Bowman, Mayor of East St. Louis in 1878, to take East St. Louis "out of the mud," and lift it above flood level. An effective scene, it is believed, will be made by a body of citizens working on a levee, with the rising Mississippi just below them.

The Piasa Bird legend will be used in early Indian episodes. Donald Robertson, a professional actor, will take the part of White Cloud, an Indian chief, which calls for high dramatic ability. The Marquette, La Salle and Tonty scenes will be somewhat like the scenes of the same names in the St. Louis Pageant. Ten scenes will be presented, all from more or less authenticated history. The production will take place after dark, and the lighting will be from above.

REPORTER ON 3300-MILE CANOE JAUNT VISITS HERE

Winnepeg Newspaperman on Wager Is Bound for New Orleans.

John E. Coultas, 23 years old, a reporter for a Winnipeg, Can., newspaper, arrived in St. Louis yesterday morning in a canoe in which he has covered 2100 miles of a 3300-mile journey from Winnipeg to New Orleans. He is a son of John Coultas of 950 Beach avenue and will spend today with his parents before leaving to complete his journey.

He left the Canadian city June 1. His expenses will be paid by the Winnipeg Press Club if he completes his journey by Oct. 1. Under the agreement with this organization he is to make the entire trip alone in his canoe and is not to obtain aid from anyone.

The canoe was upset in a storm on Lake Pepin soon after he entered the Mississippi River. On another occasion he was in a daze for a day, he says, after a deserted cabin in which he spent the night was struck by lightning. He was required to make several portages, at one of which he had to carry his canoe and provisions several miles.

Coultas' route was through the Red River, Lake Traverse, Big Stone Lake and through the Minnesota River to St. Paul. The 700-mile journey from Winnipeg to St. Paul took 42 days, while the trip from St. Paul to St. Louis, which is twice that distance, consumed only 16 days.

UPSETS CHICAGO PRIMARY

Judge Owens Arranges Ballot to Give All Equal Chance.

CHICAGO, Aug. 29.—County Judge Owens today revolutionized the method of Cook County primary campaign by ordering names of the candidates rotate on the ballots by wards. The names must be arranged, according to the Judge, so that each candidate or group of candidates may have equal opportunity in having their names at the top of the ballot. The order includes a charge that records of the filing of names were falsified by clerks of the Election Commissioners.

"The Hearst-Harrison" wing of the Democrats and the so-called insurgent faction among Republicans are said to benefit by the order as choice places had been held by their opponents.

SALOON MEN SEEK TO SET ASIDE "DRY" VICTORY

Illegal Voting in Jackson County Election Last Saturday Is Alleged.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 29.—A petition asking that the local option election held in Jackson County, outside of Kansas City and Independence, last Saturday, be declared invalid was filed in the Circuit Court today by the three saloon keepers of the county. The election resulted in a "dry" victory.

It was alleged the petition under which the County Court ordered the election contained faulty signatures and that it was illegal for voters of Blue Township to cast their ballots in Independence, that city having previously held a local option election.

The order to have Blue Township voters cast their ballots in Independence was made by the County Court, for the convenience of persons living in the Blue Township district, "dry" leaders said today.

TO SAVE EYES

Is the Object of This Free Prescription—Try It If Your Eyes Give You Trouble.

Thousands of people suffer from eye troubles because they do not know what to do. They know some good home remedy for every other minor ailment, but none for their eye troubles. They neglect their eyes, because the trouble is not sufficient to drive them to an eye specialist, who would, anyway, charge them a heavy fee. As a last resort they go to an optician or to the five and ten-cent store, and oftentimes get glasses that they do not need, or which, after being used two or three months, do their eyes more injury than good. Here is a simple prescription that every one should use:

5 grains Optona (1 tablet).
2 ounces Water.

Use three or four times a day to bathe the eyes. This prescription and the simple Optona system keeps the eyes clean, sharpens the vision and quickly overcomes inflammation and irritation; weak, watery, overworked, tired eyes and other similar troubles are greatly benefited and oftentimes cured by its use. Many reports show that wearers of glasses have discarded them after a few weeks' use. It is good for the eyes and contains no ingredient which would injure the most sensitive eyes of an infant or the aged. Any druggist can fill this prescription promptly. Try it and know for once what real eye comfort is.—ADV.

AUSTIN READY TO GIVE PRESIDENT ENTIRE CABINET

Texas City Asserts Claim to Four of the Men Who Have Been Chosen.

AUSTIN, Tex., Aug. 29.—If President Wilson should want to draw on Austin for another man or two for his Cabinet there are plenty of residents left who would not object to taking a job of that kind.

When the President appointed T. W. Gregory to the position of Attorney-General a few days ago he gave to Austin the unique distinction of having two citizens and two near-citizens in the Cabinet, making four in all, with a fifth Austin man occupying the position of private and unofficial adviser to the administration.

Postmaster-General A. S. Burleson and Gregory live in the same ward and before either of them ever thought of entering national politics they were fast friends. For many years one of their near neighbors in Austin was Prof. David F. Houston, who now holds the position of United States Secretary of Agriculture. Houston is still regarded by his old friends here as a citizen of Austin, although he moved to St. Louis a few years ago to become president of Washington University.

Bryan Has Residence There.

Not far from the old Houston home is the residence which Col. W. J. Bryan, Secretary of State, and his family occupied for three successive winters, and next to it is the beautiful home of E. M. House, who is nationally known as President Wilson's "silent partner."

To the influence of House is generally credited the appointment to Cabinet offices of Burleson, Houston and Gregory.

Besides the four men in the Cabinet who have homes in Austin or formerly resided here, there are a number of other local Democrats who have received choice appointments at the hands of President Wilson. One of the most notable of these is Thad A. Thomson Minister to Colombia.

There is a large array of Texas men who have obtained Government jobs through the aid of House. Cone Johnson of Tyler was made Solicitor of the State Department; Cato Sells of Cleburne was appointed Commissioner of Indian Affairs; Otto Praeger, formerly of San Antonio, is the Postmaster at Washington, D. C.

Many Others Appointed.

R. W. Thompson, formerly engineer of the Texas Railroad Commission, is a member of the Railroad Valuation Board of the Interstate Commerce Commission. There are many other Democrats of this State who have been appointed to minor offices.

Gregory, or Watt Gregory, as he is called by his home people, has made a specialty of anti-trust litigation ever since the anti-trust law of Texas was enacted several years ago. There has been hardly a case of this character tried in the State that he has not been found on one side or the other, either as assistant to the State's prosecution or as attorney for the attacked corporation.

In the different phases of the long-drawn-out litigation against the Waters Pierce Oil Co. and the Standard Oil Co. Gregory took a prominent part as one of the attorneys for the State of Texas, assisting the Attorney-General's department in its prosecution of the case.

40 KILLED, 1466 INJURED CELEBRATING THE FOURTH

Statistics of American Medical Association Show Only Three Tetanus Cases.

CHICAGO, Aug. 29.—Forty persons were killed and 1466 injured by explosives in Fourth of July celebrations this year, according to statistics gathered by the Journal of the American Medical Association and published here today. The record for 1914 is not so good as that of 1913, but in explanation the journal says "The fact that there were two days for celebration both last year and this (Sunday coming next to the holiday), may have had something to do with the comparatively slight increases in casualties of the last two years.

The record for six years, giving dead and injured follows:

Year.	Dead.	Injured.
1909	215	5092
1910	131	2793
1911	57	1546
1912	41	947
1913	32	1121
1914	40	1466

"There were only three cases of tetanus this year," the Journal says, "the lowest number, compared with four last year and seven in 1907."

"FRAT" CONVENTION HERE

Beta Theta Pi Meeting to Be Attended by 1000.

The seventy-fifth annual convention of the Beta Theta Pi Fraternity, which will be held in St. Louis Sept. 1, 2, 3 and 4, will be attended by approximately 1000 members. This is the third time the convention has been held here, the other two occasions being in 1885 and 1904.

Delegates from 75 active and many alumni chapters will be represented. A number of entertaining features are being planned for the guests by the local fraternity men.

W. R. C. Delegates Depart Tonight.

Officers and delegates from the Department of Missouri, Woman's Relief Corps, will leave St. Louis at 11:55 o'clock tonight for Detroit, where the annual meeting will be held. Those who will go are Carrie R. Sparklin, past national president; Rose M. Ellidge, chaplain; Mary Showers, inspector; Emily Sibille, chief of staff; Anna Wohosky, executive board; Mary Davis, Carrie Wentz and Mary Hesser, delegates.

2000 JOVIANS EXPECTED TO ATTEND CONGRESS

Talks on Electricity to St. Louis Civic Bodies Will Precede Meeting.

The St. Louis League of Electric Interests, Jovian Chapter, of which H. J. Pettengill is president, is making a schedule for a series of popular electric talks, which are to be given before the various civic and commercial bodies of St. Louis, in the interest of the Twelfth Annual Jovian Congress, which is to be held in St. Louis, Oct. 14-16.

This will be the largest scientific-social-commercial gathering held in St. Louis this year. There are over 16,000 members of the Jovian Order in United States, Canada and Mexico, and it is expected that 2000 delegates will be present. The St. Louis Chapter has a membership of 1000.

The business meetings of the congress will be held in the banquet hall and parlors of the Planters Hotel. The dinner given to the women accompanying the delegates on "Avrenim Night"—Oct. 15, will be at Sunset Inn. The Automobile Committee of which E. H. Waddington is chairman, say that 400 automobiles will be necessary to convey the visiting Jovians and their guests to Sunset Inn. Owners of automobiles are invited to lend their machines and to join the Jovians at this dinner. Automobile owners who will aid in entertaining the visitors by lending their automobiles for this night are requested to send their names to E. H. Waddington, Central National Bank building.

What he had to sell: An automobile a motor cycle, a summer cottage, a Morris chair. And he sold them through the Post-Dispatch Want Ad columns.

EXPERTS CALL MILL AND COAL DUST BOTH DEADLY

Investigators Recommend Same Precautions in Factories as in Mines.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—That the same care employed to prevent coal dust explosions should be applied to guard against grain dust and ballast in flour mills, elevators and grain products factories was the conclusion announced by experts today after co-operative investigation by millers and the Federal Bureau of Mines. Bureau chemists asserted all dusts collecting carbon were explosive under certain conditions.

After describing an explosion in a grain elevator, the mine experts report:

"We are forced to conclude that if an explosion with such terrible force and violence could occur at this elevator, then the grain elevators of the country are at all times subject to the possibility of a similar occurrence if favored conditions exist."

Reporting on the causes of grain dust explosions, the experts said:

"At the present time in modern milling plants the use of an open flame light is positively prohibited and is generally regarded as an element of very great danger.

Be Clean!
Inside and Outside

If you would be healthy, strong and happy. Baths keep the skin clean and in good condition. But what about the inside of the body? You can no more afford to neglect it than the outside. It is just as important that the system be cleansed of the poisonous impurities caused by weakness of the digestive organs or by inactivity of the liver.

DR. PIERCE'S

Every Day the Bargain Day at WOLFF-WILSON'S
Sixth and Washington Avenue
For Fifty-Four Years the Leading Cut-Rate Drug Store in St. Louis

THRONGS of careful shoppers who appreciate a saving of pennies or dollars have long since learned that they can "Get It at Wolff-Wilson's" and at a big saving of both time and money. It is nearly a half century ago since we conceived the idea of selling drugs and kindred wares at cut-rate prices, believing that largely increased sales would follow. The result was phenomenal. This idea of exacting a very small profit on each sale and an increased expansion of sales has made "Everybody's Drug Store" a mart of national reputation, being without doubt the largest in the West. The management of this gigantic business finds time to devote their entire attention to the slightest details of the different departments and to the attention and service given the customers.

Prescriptions

There are several mighty good reasons which should appeal to every thinking man and which should make you decide in favor of the Wolff-Wilson Drug Store as the most competent to fill your physician's prescriptions. These are plain arguments which every man or woman should understand and every physician should appreciate.

We fill as many prescriptions in one day as the average drug store does in a month—fresh, active drugs.

Only registered pharmacists of the highest type are permitted to work in our prescription department.

The first rule to our prescription clerks is to fill the prescription exactly according to the physician's instructions, or not to fill it at all.

Our drugs and chemicals we buy from the leading manufacturers in the country, and also subject them to a test in our own laboratory.

Physicians can depend on our having in stock the very latest discoveries (both in this country and abroad) in medicines for the treatment of all kinds of disease.

And, as a general rule, we can save you money.

BURIED STEAMER REVEALED BY RIVER BED EXCAVATIONS

Boat Found in Texas Said to Be Monterey, Which Went Down in 1852 With Cargo.

TEXARKANA, Tex., Aug. 29.—Workmen excavating in the old bed of the Red River near here, last week, uncovered the hull of an old steamboat, and in the hold of the boat they found five barrels of whisky. This whisky, according to old residents, who say the steamboat was the ill-fated Monterey, which went down in 1852, was 62 years old, and should have been thoroughly mellowed with age. But while the men were handling the barrels, they fell to pieces, allowing the whisky to run out into the sand, and not a man knows its taste.

In spite of this discouraging circumstance, the workingmen proceeded with the exploration and found a barrel of pork, a bolt of broadcloth, some brass kettles, blacksmith and shoemaker's outfits, several hand grist mills, table knives, forks and spoons, hunting knives, a large quantity of marbles, some English chinaware with blue pattern flowers, large quantities of colored glass beads and other trinkets for trading with the Indians. All were in a fairly good state of preservation.

On the blade of one of the pocket knives was the inscription, "Americans never surrender." This knife is in the possession of J. R. Turbyfill of Texarkana, an engineer of the Texas & Pacific Railroad.

J. T. Pickett, a planter living on the river near the place where the Monterey sank, recently revived the story of the old boat and began investigations which resulted in his locating the exact spot where she went down. The river has several times changed its course since 1852, but old maps and information secured from old steamboat captains aided in determining the course of the river at that time. A. G. Swain of Nashville, Tenn., whose grandfather, William Swain, was captain of the Monterey, gave some valuable information.

Those who claim to know the history of the Monterey say she left New Orleans in the spring of 1852 and turned from the Mississippi into the Red River with a cargo of merchandise to trade with the Indians. They say that after she passed Shreveport she sank and none of the cargo was saved. When found the steamboat was completely covered with mud and sand.

Englishmen Praise Churchill for the Navy's Preparedness

born in Admiral Troubridge that tremendous admiration the whole service has come to feel for Churchill, for he found that there was not a single error, technical or other. That is the way Churchill works and that is typical of the mind he has to work with.

Remarkably Effective Speaker

He has become one of the most effective of speakers, both in the House of Commons and on the platform. The two gifts are not often combined in a rare degree, but they are in Churchill. The vast popular audiences love him and the House of Commons hears him gladly. He has a strong sense of humor and can banter an opponent with great effect.

His physical courage is of a high type, as has been proved again and again. He took part in the famous cavalry charge at Omdurman, although nominally only a newspaper man. During the Boer War he fought when the armored train was captured, leading a forlorn hope again and again after all the officers were killed, until at last someone without authority hoisted the white flag. He was captured by the Boers, but escaped in remarkable fashion to take his chance in a hostile country of reaching the British troops. He succeeded, however, and fought again, although there was a price on his head for recapture and a firing squad for his punishment.

During the last general election he was speaking at Grimsby from the balcony of his hotel and the crowd was entirely hostile and yelling for his blood. He wished to cross the street to the Liberal Club and was warned that there was little chance of his getting there alive. They offered him a body guard. He declined and walked straight through the enraged crowd. As they saw him going they set up a howl of anger, but he went steadily, pushing through the howlers. When the crowd realized the courage of the man facing them alone, they set up a cheer for him as he passed safely through to the portals of the club.

He has a physical defect in his mouth that makes it impossible for him to pronounce certain words properly, but he has so studied and worked to overcome this that today it is hardly noticeable and certainly after the first few sentences it is forgotten.

He Has Made Many Enemies

He has struggled since the beginning of his career, as he has raised, in his march to success, a very full crop of enemies. In the army he was so hated that practically he had to resign. The fact was he knew too much for his brother officers to appreciate, and had the habit, while junior subaltern, of telling the officers' mess, from the Colonel down, how things ought to be run. For this he was awarded the nickname of "The Blenheim Pup." Doubtless these men are cheering him today and admiring, as all must, his splendid work on the sea fighting machine. He has never been popular personally by reason of his uncertain temper and austerely superior bearing toward his fellows when in close contact with them. That has, perhaps, created the impression that he will never be Prime Minister. But he is beginning to mellow and expand with increasing power and authority. And who shall say the possibilities of such genius in a man of 40 years of age? And should the navy do as is now expected of it, he may easily become a great popular, and there will be associated with his name a tradition of political glory worthy of the Churchill glories in the sphere of war.

He will be the first Churchill to lead a party should he become Prime Minister. His father led in the House of Commons and led brilliantly, when he was only 37, but he was erratic and not trusted. His own leader, Lord Salisbury, accepted his resignation with relief. But the American strain in Churchill may teach him to profit by his father's life.

He is not yet trusted by the party of which he is one of the leaders. But he is not the man to overlook the need to win by words as well as fighting and this one-time Conservative may triumph in the Liberal party he has joined by overcoming all present prejudices and establishing himself by his sincerity and loyalty to principles of peace, retrenchment and reform, not less than to his proven principles of lofty patriotism and unsullied imperialism.

LOAN COMPANY BRINGS SUIT TO COLLECT $4000

Disagreement Over Valuation of Property Damaged by Fire Causes Action.

Disagreement over the value of property damaged in a fire at the Pierce Loan Co. offices, 713 Pine street, May 12, led to three suits yesterday to collect $4000, the face of insurance policies, against the Buffalo Commercial Insurance Co. and the German Insurance Co. of Buffalo and the Netherlands Fire and Life Insurance Co. of The Hague.

The insurance companies previously filed an injunction suit against the loan company to prevent a suit for collection. The companies allege that Charles J. Becker, selected as umpire by appraisers for both sides, had resigned, and asked the Court to name his successor. The loan company alleges that Becker agreed with its appraiser on a valuation of $4100 for the damaged property.

BRASS BED—MATTRESS SALON

Will Be Formally Opened Tomorrow

PICTURE in your mind a most brilliant spectacle and you will gain some idea of the amazing beauty this new department presents.

MIDST a rich setting of forest-green carpeting and soft, creamy walls, are phalanx upon phalanx of brass beds, gleaming and sparkling in lightning-like scintillations reflected from the myriad lights hung overhead.

IT is beautiful—it is wonderful, you will say, and after drinking in the charm of this fairyland of shimmering beds, it will dawn on you how very conveniently everything is arranged—how simple it is to see everything in the immense showing without confusion or fatigue—how exceptionally low the prices are for the splendid qualities offered.

THIS new department has been established not only to keep pace with the well deserved popularity of metal beds, but also and chiefly to display to best advantage our immense variety of mattresses. Few people realize that the variety and high standard of our showing is unsurpassed in the United States. Besides showing these mattresses, made up in the various tickings and sizes and exhibiting them on the beds, we also show cut-open samples so that you can see and examine the materials they are made of. You will like this feature especially.

BETTER than merely invite you to witness the lovely spectacle this salon presents, we will make such a visit especially worth your while by offering the following special values in honor of the opening of this finer and larger brass bed-mattress department.

Advice on Beauty

by Claire Ainsworth

NOTE—If the reader does not find the information wanted in the questions answered below, just address a letter to Miss Claire Ainsworth, 40 Patterson Bldg., Dayton, O., enclosing self-addressed stamped envelope, and she will gladly advise on health problems. The articles and preparations mentioned are on sale by all wholesale druggists, large retail and department stores; or any accommodating dealer can obtain them for you.

M. G. B. asks: "How can I whiten my complexion and get rid of pimples, blotches, red nose, blackheads and greasy appearance of my face?"

Answer: Your letter indicates that your blood is in bad condition. Begin taking at once something to purify the blood. For this purpose obtain one-grain tablets quinoxide. The whitening effect is marvelously beautiful.

Martha G. asks: "Will you please tell me of a good, reliable and harmless hair tonic?"

Answer: I get ¼ ounce hairwand powder and dissolve it in a pint of pure soft water. It is apparently a natural hair and scalp remedy superior in every way, because it is free from alcohol—which I deem harmful to the hair and scalp. Rub into the scalp with the fingers. To darken gray and faded hair, use a pint of sage tea, instead of water, and dissolve the hairwand powder in it. Apply it to the hair evenly twice daily.

Maude C. asks: "I am getting more fleshy day by day and have resolved to take treatment to reduce. Please tell me of a safe, harmless and effective remedy."

Answer: Get from a well-stocked pharmacy five-grain phythyrin tablets and take according to directions in sealed tube. This formula is prescribed widely by physicians and one whom I personally know says it is harmless and very effective.

D. B. C. asks: "Is there anything safe to use for removing unnatural hair growth on the face and arms?"

Answer: A friend was bothered until she discovered that ordinary fluvol powder would instantly destroy the hair, without injuring the skin. Get the powder in a sealed air-tight package.

Agnes L. asks: "I am losing my hair by the combful and my scalp is covered with scurf, while it itches terribly. What will stop the troubles?"

Answer: The use of plain yellow minyol will check and cure dandruff and itching scalp, stop the falling hair and restore a healthy condition of the scalp. Apply as per the directions on 4-oz. jars. This preparation is made for and widely used by professional hairdressers. Before beginning this treatment shampoo with gloriol liquid shampoo, a very high-grade preparation.

Miss Jean asks: "There seems to be no oil in my skin, which is dry, yellow and rough. What treatment should I use?"

Answer: Your skin needs a good pure emollient flesh builder, and for this purpose nothing on the market is so good as gloriol emollient, sold in sealed jars. Use it morning and night and soon the flesh will improve in tone and the skin will become white and pink. This emollient puts new life and color in the face, while it fills hollows and removes other complexion blemishes.

Marguerite asks: "What is the object in using vanishing or greaseless cream?"

Answer: The purpose of a good, pure, fragrant greaseless cream is to protect the skin from the severity of sun, wind and weather. Be sure to use a good and harmless cream. I use and recommend one called gloriol balm, sold in sealed tubes. It prevents chapping, burning, roughness and freckles, while it is delightfully soothing and pleasant to apply.

C. R. P. asks: "I cannot find a good toilet soap that pleases me. What one do you recommend?"

Answer: I long ago discontinued the use of ordinary toilet soaps, because I found that I could not keep my skin and complexion perfect by their use. I now recommend and use gloriol glowene, a "water massage cream," which cleanses the deepest pores, reduces large pores and softens and clears the skin beautifully. It comes in sealed tubes, very convenient and sanitary to use.

Mrs. A. R. asks: "I would give anything I possess to find something to overcome my scrawny arms, hands, neck and bust. What am I to do?"

Answer: I can only advise the same treatment which I have heretofore given in these columns. Defective circulation and nutrition are responsible for your pitiful condition. First, take a good tonic and flesh builder, and for this I know of nothing better than 3-grain hypo-nuclane tablets, sold by most pharmacists. Then the parts should daily be supplied with a nourishing skin food, and for this you should obtain in sealed tubes, medicated venosol, which is especially used by actresses and society women to develop the bust, arms and neck. Full directions are given with the article, and rapid development is certain to follow its use. Take deep-breathing exercises daily.

R. M. asks: "Can you recommend a remedy to make the hair fluffy, wavy and curling? I have to put my hair in kids every night, and sometimes the curl comes out before noon."

Answer: Have you never tried gloriol wavolene? It defies detection and makes the hair curl and wave beautifully. One application will keep the hair in curl for a week or more.

Elsie R. asks: "Is it good to use face powder after using gloriol balm?"

Answer: Yes, if you use a good, pure, refined powder that will not clog the pores. I advise the gloriol face powder, which comes in pink, white and brunette. Send two stamps for my book, "Beauty Truths." It is free to all my readers.—ADVERTISEMENT.

1950 AMERICAN REFUGEES SAIL FROM ROTTERDAM

Liner Built to Carry 500 First-class Passengers Bringing 1410 to New York.

ROTTERDAM, Aug. 29.—The Holland-American liner Rotterdam sailed from this port early today for New York, bearing more than 2400 passengers of whom 1950 were American refugees from the Continent. There were 1410 first-cabin passengers, 720 second-class and 300 steerage.

Soren Listoe, American Consul-General here, inspected the emergency first-cabin accommodations and expressed himself as satisfied. Although these quarters are located in the freight hold, they are quite comfortable. There are four berths to each cabin.

Henry Van Dyke, American Minister to Holland, came to Rotterdam from The Hague to bid the party Godspeed. In a short address he requested that they bear in mind the times and exercise patience if their eggs happen to be boiled two seconds too long. He asked the passengers to pray that the open door to Holland be kept ajar.

The Ambassador assured the travelers that no danger was imminent. He said the Dutch Government had released G. Stenger, commander of the Rotterdam from the naval reserve duties to which he had been called as a courtesy to the Americans because he was the best Captain in the service.

The Rotterdam originally was fitted to accommodate only 500 first-class passengers, but on this trip she is carrying 900 in excess of that number.

At 11 o'clock last night a special train arrived here from Berlin with 350 Americans, many of whom will leave for England by the way of Flushing on a boat this morning. They stated that their trip from the German capital was without event. The German and Dutch officials showed them many courtesies.

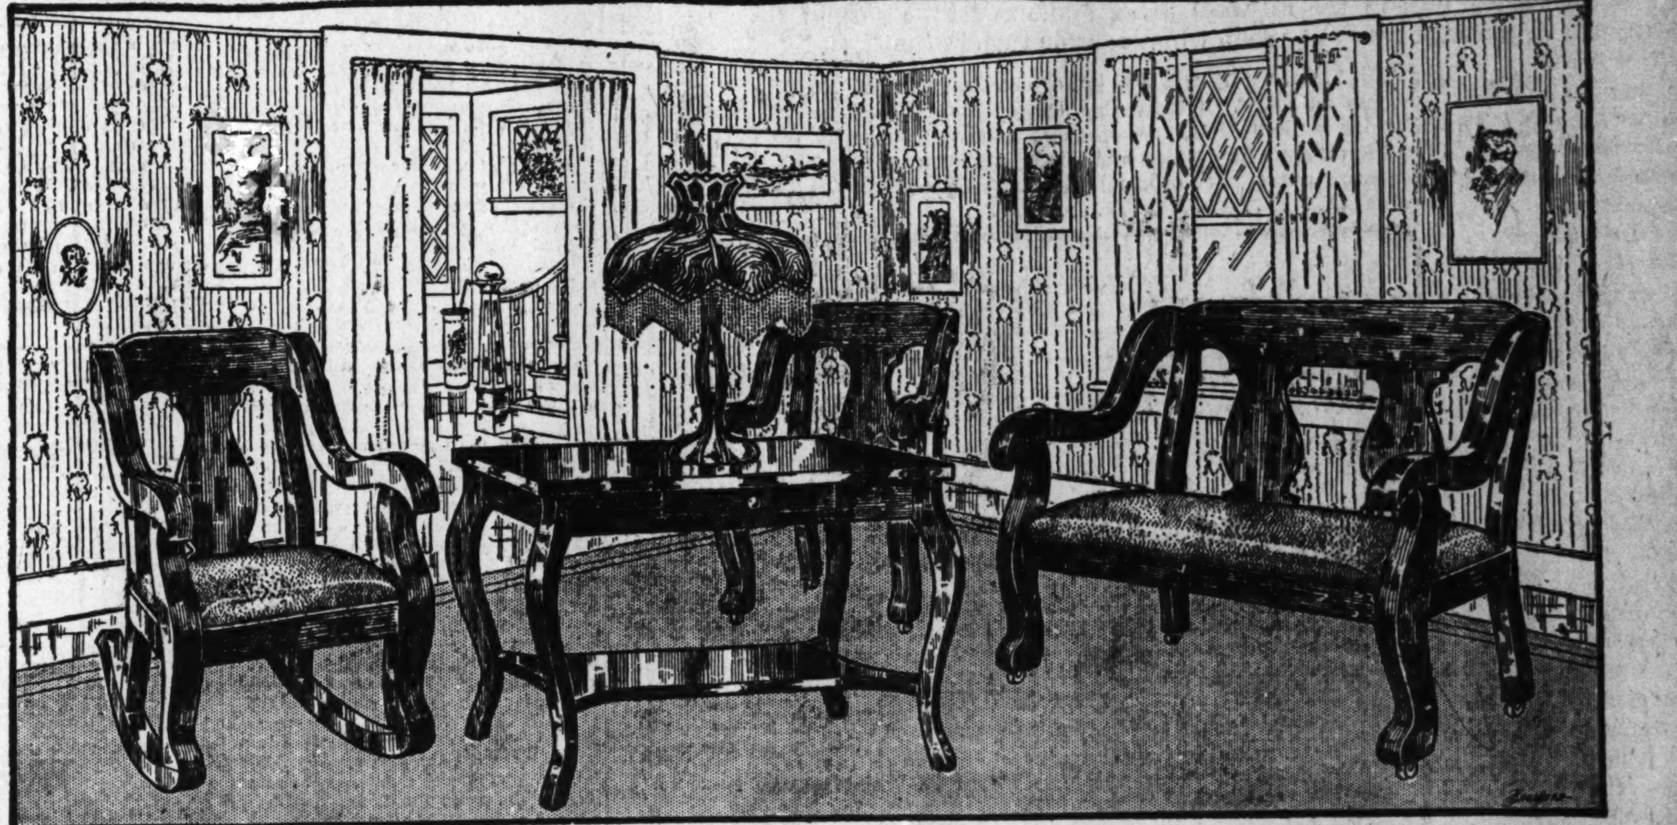
Again we Present this Remarkable Offer

COMPLETE PARLOR OUTFIT

Consisting of GENUINE LEATHER Settee, Chair and Rocker—together with Library Table and Art Lamp.

$2.00 CASH — ALL FOR $29.75 — $2.00 A MONTH



We want every man and woman in St. Louis to stop and consider just what this offer means—it includes all the furniture to furnish your parlor completely—a beautiful Parlor Settee—a massive Arm Rocker—handsome Arm Chair to match—all upholstered in genuine leather of the finest quality—together with a large Library Table—and an exquisite Art Lamp for gas or electricity—all for only $29.75—on terms of $2.00 cash and $2.00 a month.

Here It Is Again

When we presented this offer a month or two ago, the entire lot on hand was closed out in two days—and hundreds of late comers had to be disappointed. New shipments of these Parlor Sets, Tables and Lamps have just been received—and tomorrow, again, you may share in the greatest offering of the season.

The Parlor Suit

Consists of three large and handsome pieces—a Settee, Chair and Rocker—the frames are of massive design in Colonial effects and in finest mahogany finish—each piece has bent back, shaped arms and French legs.

It's Genuine Leather

All three pieces of this Parlor Suit are upholstered in genuine leather of the finest quality over beds of oil-tempered steel springs—and, remember, when we say genuine leather we mean the real article and not one of the many imitations of leather which are so often shown.

The Library Table

Is exactly as illustrated—a design that harmonizes perfectly with the rest of this suit—it is extra long and wide—in rich mahogany finish, highly polished and finely finished—has 24x36-inch top, fancy designed legs and broad lower shelf for books or magazines.

The Art Lamp

Is extremely attractive—has large leaded glass dome shade in fancy design with deep beaded fringe—and is fitted for electricity (with cord)—or for gas (with tubing) as desired—a lamp that you are sure to admire.

To appreciate this offer you must consider what these pieces would cost you if bought separately—a genuine leather Parlor Suit like this cannot be had elsewhere for less than $32.00—the table is a $10.00 value—the art lamp would be a bargain at $8.00—so we are offering you a $50.00 outfit for only $29.75.

Note the Terms

As a special inducement to you to open an account with us this week, we offer this handsome outfit at this extremely low price of $29.75—and on terms of payment that are equally pleasing—all you pay is $2.00 cash and the balance $2.00 a month.

Attend to This Tomorrow

We have no desire to hurry you—but our experience tells us that the demand is going to be tremendous—and while we believe we have made ample preparations, still these Parlor Outfits may all be disposed of before the week is over—so you will see the folly of delaying until the last minute.

The Blackfeet

BY CLARK M'ADAMS.

I WAS on the Blackfoot reservation in Northwest Montana this month, and consequently saw almost nothing of the Blackfoot Indians. (The best place to see Indians is at the 101 Ranch show.) However, I saw a few, and heard of many. Time was when the Blackfoot was a fighting man and could fight like a Belgian; but nowadays, when the devilish ingenuity of the paleface has made fighting such a hazardous pastime, the Blackfoot sits around and looks on while the more enlightened races shoot each other up. He was a very good fighter when one could operate from behind a tree, but now that most military missiles go right on through a tree, he has given it up. There are only about 3000 Blackfeet left, and they are not in a position to find serious fault with anybody. They are very busily engaged in self-preservation, and if our Government does not get into trouble enough to have to call upon them to help us, as the English are doing with the Hindus, they will hold on as a nation for some little time.

The Blackfeet I saw were about 6 feet high, very big-boned, good-natured, and apparently not worrying about anything on earth. They looked as if they could do a tremendous amount of work if they wanted to, but there was no indication about that any work had been done to speak of, and I concluded that they had not yet gotten to it. They have the most beautiful reservation I have ever seen. It lies under the Rocky Mountains for a distance of 60 miles south of the Canadian line, is about forty miles wide, and is watered by innumerable streams from the eternal glaciers. The grass at this season is waist high, the whole country is green as a beryl, and if one plants anything in that fertile soil one must step aside quickly to keep it from coming up and knocking one down. Cattle have to be middled around with a leather strap to keep them from bursting, and if the Blackfeet were an agricultural people, which they are not, they could make the celebrated country around Hutchinson, Kan., look like a sheep range. One wonders if the Blackfeet roamed all over the continent and then picked this place out. There was time to have done this, and if they did it they were no more than those wise men which they are said to be now. I was told that the policies of the tribe are controlled by a few old men, by comparison with whom an owl is a lunatic. The sit in council with their heads very close together, and when the Indian agent cannot see things the way they see them they all take the train East and walk into the White House. Mr. James J. Hill, the railroad king, whose mournful forecasts of what we are coming to have amused this optimistic nation for many years, is a great friend of the Blackfeet, and Mr. George Bird Grinnell, the editor of Forest and Stream, is one of their honorary chiefs. The Blackfeet never hesitate to take into their confidence and council a good set of white wits, and they owe their well-being as a nation to their own judgment, backed up by that of men who are somewhat wiser in the ways of the world. One of their wise men was pointed out to me. His fine face was furrowed with probably 50 years of hard and consecutive thinking. His two-story brow was a study in brain work, corrugated by problems such an no white man, perhaps, has ever had occasion to solve. His nutcracker, or the great furrow leading up from his nose, was deep and powerful enough to crack a filbert. I set that man in mental picture against the background of the last 50 years, and trailed across his face in imagery a film of all that the perfidious white face had tried to do to him in that time—the land thieves he had dealt with, the Indian agents who were so crooked that when they died they had, as a Montana wit expressed it, "to be screwed in the ground"; the ignorance at home and at Washington, the dishonesty that hedged him about and the double-dealing that Zeppelined him from the skies. I took off my hat to him in a silent and respectful obesiance, and made this beatitude:

Blessed are the wise, for they shall see Socrates.

THE following unuttered dialogue took place between my inquisitive curiosity and the patriarch's obvious intelligence:

Said I: Why do the Blackfeet not cultivate their lands and make them to grow grains as the white people do?

Said he: Why should we grow grains that we do not need, when a very little answers our own wants?

Said I: You could sell them, and have the money.

Said he (smiling): Ah! And what, pray, could we do with the money?

Said I: You could have nice homes and automobiles, educate your children and have luxuries around you like the whites.

Said he: That we could do, no doubt; but we are Indians. Yesterday we were free as the birds and roamed where we would. The transition from that life to the one you speak of cannot be brought about in a day.

Said I: No, it cannot.

Said he (pointing): Do you see that white tepee beside the Indian's house?

Said I: Yes.

Said he: Do you know what that means?

Said I: No.

Said he: That means that the Government wants the Indian to have a house, so the Indian builds one. Then he puts up his tepee beside the house, and lives in the tepee.

Said I (laughing): That reminds me of the way to camp without being bothered by mosquitoes. Do you know how it is done?

Said he (smiling): No.

Said I: You first go into the tent, and all the mosquitoes follow you in. Then you step out, close the tent, and sleep outside.

Said he (after laughing in a free, outdoor way): It is very good. Possibly the Indian's children will live in the house. The Indian has lived too long in his tent. Possibly the Indian's children, too, will take all these fine lands and make them grow grains. The Indian does not want wealth. He has never had it, and he has always done very well. The Indian wants only that which he needs. You know, we always held our lands in common, and there were among us neither rich nor poor, but all of one lot.

Said I: That was beautiful.

Said he: Don't the Socialists dream of that same ideal condition?

Said I: Yes, they do.

Said he: Well, we have always had it. Nobody, like Mr. Rockefeller, could own everything, while everybody else suffered for food and shelter.

Said I: That was beautiful, truly.

Said he: Yes. The white people are such hogs. We are afraid to have the Indian do as they do. We are afraid that he, too, will become a hog, and then a few Indians will stick feathers in their hats and call themselves Macaroni, leaving everybody else to starve.

Said I: But you cannot go on being Indians always.

Said he: No happiness can last.

Said I: You must hold your lands in severalty some time, and live like the whites.

Said he: Alas! yes; but we can be happy while we may. They are dividing them now.

Said I: But we are not unhappy.

Said he: No, you are used to it. The Indian will make a happy white man, too, when he gets used to it. Remember, it was only yesterday.

Said I: I shall remember—yesterday.

Woodpeckers Nearly Run Legs Off a Deaf Man's Razorbacks

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.

AT a social affair recently Washington statesmen were swapping yarns about acquiring habits. When Congressman John H. Small of North Carolina thought the time was opportune, he sprung one that changed the topic after his listeners had recovered themselves.

"One afternoon," he said, "a traveling salesman was going through a wooded section, when he saw a lot of razorback hogs crazily running from tree to tree. For a while he wonderingly watched the show, but not being able to solve the problem, he asked a woman standing near a small cabin what ailed the porkers.

"'It's this way,' answered the woman. 'My husband is deaf and dumb, and he learned the hogs to come to dinner when he tapped on a tree'—

"'You don't mean it!' smilingly interjected the salesman. 'Did it work?'

"'Yes, for a while,' answered the woman beside the cabin. 'But now the woodpeckers are almost makin' the poor things run their legs off.'"

Senator Kern's 25-Cent Friend Sure He Could Help Practice

WHEN Senator Kern was practicing law in Indianapolis he had a large clientelle who went to him for free advice. He never offered to charge them anything, but one day a client came who insisted on paying him a fee.

"How much do I owe you?" he asked.

"Not a thing in the world," replied Kern, surprised at the question.

"But I always pay for everything," the client insisted.

Kern insisted there was no charge, but the man was determined. He walked over to his desk and laid a quarter on it.

"Stand by me," he said, "and I'll bring you some more business some day."

ST. LOUIS GIRLS SAFE

F. C. Pauley Hears From Daughter in Europe.

F. C. Pauley of 889 Maple place yesterday received a cablegram from his daughter, Miss Daisy Pauley, who was in Frankfort, Germany, when he last heard from her, Aug. 4, saying that she was at Rotterdam and safely out of the war zone. The cable stated she expected to sail from Liverpool for home Sept. 11.

Miss Pauley is accompanied by Mrs. Anna Hunt of 4171 Flad avenue. They went to Europe July 1 and expected to spend several months touring Austria, Germany, France and other countries. The cablegram did not state how they got out of Germany.

BOY KILLED UNDER CAR

Crushed When Trying to "Hop" Moving Train.

John Pickel, 11 years old, of 700 O'Fallon street, lost an arm and leg yesterday morning when he fell beneath a moving freight car which he was trying to "hop" in the railroad yards at Main and O'Fallon streets.

He was taken to the city hospital and died there shortly before noon.

Edward Card to Speak at Church.

Supt. Edward Card of the City Rescue Mission will speak at the Presbyterian Church of the Covenant, 2540 North Grand avenue, at 11 o'clock this morning.

BRITISH SEIZE 140 BATTLE-SCARRED '101' SHOW HORSES

Steeds Seasoned in Mexico Taken From "Wild West" Show Parade in London.

BLISS, Ok., Aug. 29.—How 140 battle-scarred Mexican horses, which were sent abroad with one of the two "Wild West" shows of Miller Brothers' "101" Ranch, were seized and confiscated for military purposes by the British Government while the show was on parade in London, has become known through the correspondence of Zack T. Miller, who went with the show, with his brother, here.

The two shows commenced their European tours early in the season. One was touring Germany when the European war broke out and, so far as known, has disappeared from the map. The Miller brothers have been unable to learn of its fate.

The other show went to England and also met with disaster. With the show were the 140 Mexican steeds—the pick of 1400 that were acquired from the Mexican Federal army after its rout by Villa and wild flight over the United States border. These horses bore the brand of every Mexican army, from Zapata's region to the Rio Grande, and had faced machine guns and rifle fire until it had become commonplace to them. They were picked for arena work when the show was organized.

Taken From Parade.

A London bank holiday fell upon the Wednesday before war was declared and the show played to $10,000 for the day, but the next day the "Wild West" performers easily outnumbered the audience. A parade was begun, but the trained, veteran war steeds had scarcely moved off the show grounds when agents and officers of the British Government seized them. The show wagons were left standing in the streets. Protest was futile. Britain needed good war horses and took them.

Cable messages to the United States seeking aid were long delayed. The show troupe clamored to return home, except the Cossack riders, who clamored to go to Russia's frontier. Arrangements for transportation could not be made.

Miller Sells 10,000 Horses.

But Miller, having lost his show, quickly applied his American ingenuity for bargaining. He entered into negotiations with the British Government for a supply of horses from Oklahoma and the Southwest. The first proposal to him was for delivery at Liverpool, the Government to insure the ocean trip. This was later changed to a contract for the delivery of 10,000 horses to British agents in the United States.

By this time the 140 Mexican war steeds are probably in the thick of a new warfare in a new land and if anyone survives, it will be a seasoned veteran, to be sure. Furthermore, the Miller brothers have declared that should any of the horses survive and find their way back to the United States, they will pay top prices for them, whatever their condition might be.

52 ENTRIES FOR THE "PERFECT BABY" CONTEST

500 Probably to Compete in Annual Franklin Avenue Fall Festival.

The Franklin Avenue Improvement Association received 52 entries last week in its "Perfect Baby Contest," which will take place during the annual Fall Festival, Sept. 28 to Oct. 3. The babies entered are from North End, South Side, West End, Webster Groves, Kirkwood and Ferguson. Special prizes will be given to twins and triplets. It is expected over 500 babies will be entered.

Dr. James Stewart, Supervisor of Hygiene of the public schools, has been appointed chief of the medical staff of the contest. He will be assisted by about 30 prominent physicians, nurses and social service workers. Society and club women will serve as hostesses throughout the week.

The entrants will be examined by a clinic, privately, and then entered in the contest which will be open to the public. Only the physical and mental qualities of the entrant count. Each is scored along scientific measurements, arranged and devised by Mrs. Frank De Garmo.

Applications for the contest can be obtained from the merchants who are members of the Franklin Avenue Improvement Association, between Fourth and High streets, or from Miss Anita Moore, chairman of the committee, 3921 McPherson avenue. The entries will close Sept. 15.

The Franklin Avenue Improvement Association and the individual merchants and manufacturers will give a number of handsome presents to visitors to "the Avenue" during the week of the Fall Festival.

Eight bands will play each afternoon and evening, as well as motion pictures in each block each evening of the festival.

ARMY OFFICER DROPPED

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—First Lieutenant Fielding L. Poindexter, retired, has been dropped from the army roll as a deserter. He had failed to obey an order to appear at the War Department and answer complaints of creditors. Previously the officer's pay had been stopped in a vain effort to make him communicate with the department.

Lieut. Poindexter is a native of Virginia, 43 years old, and became a Second Lieutenant of coast artillery after serving as a volunteer during the Spanish War. He was retired for disability in 1909.

Choir to Sing at Mission.

The Friedens Church choir will sing at the City Rescue Mission, 913 Morgan street, this evening. J. I. McClelland will speak. The Mizpah Bible Class of the Washington and Compton Presbyterian Church will also take part.

CHILD, 3, RESCUED WHEN SHE FALLS INTO WELL

Marissa Man Saves Girl by Jumping Into Water in 15-Foot Hole.

William Burgadine of Marissa saved the life of the 3-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Thew of Belleville Friday when he jumped into a 15-foot well into which the child had fallen. It contained five feet of water. Burgadine was rescued by means of a rope thrown into the well by members of his family.

The child was visiting at the Burgadine home and fell into the well while at play. Burgadine and members of his family were attracted by her cries.

2,266,535 ALIENS IN U. S.

Census of 1910 Shows Foreigners Not Naturalized.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—There were 13,515,886 persons of foreign birth—14.7 per cent of the total population—in the United States in April, 1910, the Census Bureau announced today. All were white except 170,341, chiefly Japanese and Chinese.

The number of foreign born white males more than 21 years old in 1910 was 6,646,817. Of these 3,034,117 had been naturalized, 570,772 had "first papers" and 2,266,535 were aliens.

WILD GEESE FLY SOUTH

Early Migration Indicates Early Winter Experts Say.

Flocks of wild geese flying southward were reported from several sections of St. Louis County Friday night. The geese were flying low and their chant could be plainly heard.

The early southward flight of the waterfowl is regarded by the students of weather conditions as an indication of an early winter. The geese begin to move toward a warmer climate with the first appearance of cold weather in the north.

Only Sure Corn Cure Ever Known

"Gets-It" the New Way, 2 Drops Do It

Use "GETS-IT" for Corns and You Won't "Holler" When You Put on Your Shoes.

To endure the pains and tortures caused by a little thing like a corn is ridiculous, simply because it is unnecessary. The new-plan corn cure, "GETS-IT," is the first one ever known to remove corns without fail, without pain and without trouble. This is why it is the biggest-selling corn cure in existence today. It is now used by millions, because it does away with sticky tape, with plasters and cotton rings that shift their position and press down onto the corn, with salves that "raw up" the toe, with "harnesses" that cause pressure and pain, with knives, razors and files, clawing and pulling at a corn.

"GETS-IT" is applied in two seconds. Two drops applied with the glass rod do the work. Pain goes, the corn shrivels, vanishes. Accept no substitute. Try it on any corn, wart, callus or bunion tonight.

"GETS-IT" is sold by druggists everywhere, 25c a bottle, or sent direct by E. Lawrence & Co., Chicago.

PORT ARTHUR HERO IS SHOE COBBLER IN ILLINOIS TOWN

Edward Garfield Blew Up Russian Battleship to Prevent Its Capture by Japanese.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

GALESBURG, Ill., Aug. 29.—Edward Garfield, Russian engineer, who blew up the battleship Retvizan at the fall of Port Arthur to prevent its capture by Japan, is a shoe cobbler in this city. He left Russia soon after the war and came to the United States and has since been a resident of Galesburg.

As a subject of the Czar, he gave seven years to military service and gained distinction during the Russian war with Japan. He was severely wounded three times.

The Retvizan, he says, was built at Philadelphia and cost Russia $7,500,000. The cruiser gave effective service, until an internal explosion caused such damage that it was necessary to place her in dry dock for an overhauling. Following repairs she again entered the service and ably defended Port Arthur. Garfield was chief engineer of the vessel when he fired the magazine and destroyed her, after it had become evident that the Japanese would take the port and an order was given to blow up the great war vessel.

Russian Soldiers Brave.

Garfield says Russian soldiers are brave, but that the officers live in idleness, luxury and dissipation and regard privates as so many beasts. The peasants, who compose the rank and file, he says, are sent to slaughter without hesitation. They are underclothed, underfed and paid but a trifle, according to Garfield, while the officers high in authority acquire wealth.

He cites the case of a high officer at Port Arthur who, he says, accumulated $2,000,000 during the war. Garfield asserts that he knew of instances of graft among high commanders while privates were suffering for food.

After the war, when Garfield returned home, he asserts, he found the land which his mother owned was so heavily taxed the tax amounted practically to confiscation. He later came to America and has no desire to return. He exhibits two medals which were presented to him by the Government as a tribute to his bravery during a battle. He served as first-class machinist and second gunner and later as chief engineer. he has his discharge papers.

Sees Russian Republic.

"I firmly believe," says Garfield, "that the present European war will lift the yoke of oppression from the Russian people. The Czar will be dethroned and the vast areas of land, at present unoccupied, will be distributed among the poor. The Russians will then be given their freedom, while Russia will become a republic like the United States, taking its place, in the course of a few years, with the most intelligent and progressive nations of the earth.

"While millions in Russia are starving, the Czar owns millions of acres of land that are not occupied. The people of Russia have never had public schools for the reason that the Government is opposed to them. When the Russian people have some incentive toward ambition and are not held down by an iron hand, they will become progressive and ambitious like the people in the United States."

Garfield charges that Port Arthur need not have surrendered. He says it had plenty of food and ammunition and that the Russian soldiers are among the best in the world.

"Nobody can beat them," he declared. "The Japs never defeated us at Port Arthur. We defeated them every time we fought. I was shot three times and got nothing out of the war. One of the high officers was not wounded, yet he picked up $2,000,000. That is why I am a Socialist."

MOUNT ST. ROSE BAZAR MEETING SET FOR SEPT. 7

Plans Anticipate One of the Most Successful Society - Charity Functions of Early Autumn.

There will be a general meeting at Mount St. Rose Hospital at 3 p. m. today, of all those interested in making the annual bazar of the hospital, Monday, Sept. 7—Labor day—the most successful society-charity affair of the early autumn. It is expected that more than 200 men and women and society girls will attend.

The spacious grounds surrounding the hospital will be transformed into a gay carnival scene. The booths will be artistically decorated and there will be articles for sale—useful, ornamental and toys. There will be pillows, aprons, all manner of fancy work—embroidery, lace and fine needle work—quilts, cigars, ice cream, lemonade, dolls, fresh country eggs, butter, home-made jelly, pickles and preserves—just the kind mother makes. There also will be games and entertainment and supper will be served in the garden and dining hall.

Mount St. Rose, which was founded 14 years ago by the Sisters of St. Mary, is the only institution in the city devoted exclusively to the care of tubercular cases. The United States Military Band from Jefferson Barracks will assist in making the bazar a success, by furnishing music from 2 p. m. to 10 p. m. The commanding officer at Jefferson Barracks, Col. John H. Beacon, has always gladly given permission for the Jefferson Barracks band to play at the Mount St. Rose bazar.

Dr. Louis C. Boisliniere, chief of the medical staff of the hospital; Phil Scanlan and a number of others will assist the sisters in receiving the public at the bazar.

State U. Professor Resigns.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 29.—Dr. Robert Mogden, who occupies the chair of psychology at the University of Tennessee, has tendered his resignation to accept the corresponding chair at the University of Kansas. He has been prominent in the American and Southern psychological associations and as a lecturer. The vacancy has not been filled.

TEN PANAMA EXPOSITION PALACES ARE FINISHED

Court of Four Seasons Is Completed and Many Buildings in Advanced Stage.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 29.—Ten of the eleven exhibit palaces of the Panama-Pacific Exposition are completed and the eleventh, the Palace of Fine Arts, will be ready in a few weeks. Festival Hall and the Press Building are nearly completed. The great courts are receiving sculpture and paintings, and the "Court of the Four Seasons" is finished.

The Honduras, Canada and Idaho buildings are finished and those of New York, Oregon, Sweden, Bolivia, Pennsylvania, North Dakota, Indiana, the Philippines, Hawaii, Maryland, Ohio, Illinois, Virginia, Washington, Wisconsin, the Netherlands, China, Kansas and Massachusetts will be ready in a short time.

China has been granted 2000 square feet in the Place of Machinery, the largest of the Exposition structures, and for the first time in her history will have exhibits of machinery at a World's Fair.

MINER FINDS A FORTUNE UNDER HIS CABIN FLOOR

Alaskan Lived Nine Years Above Nuggets Without Discovering His Wealth.

FAIRBANKS, Alaska, Aug. 29.—George Sharp, a miner of Pedro Creek, lived over a fortune more than nine years before he knew that the fortune existed. Sharp when he first came to the Fairbanks district, located a claim on the right limit of Pedro Creek opposite No. 2, and prospected for gold on the claim at different times ever since.

He spent most of his time searching for the yellow stuff on his other holdings, apparently neglectful of the possibilities right under the floor of his cabin. A few weeks ago Sharp sank a shaft near his cabin, got some prospects and then tunneled to bed rock for 10 feet or so.

He encountered coarse gold, some fair sized nuggets being included in the dust obtained after sluicing a small dump.

The Post-Dispatch is the only evening newspaper in St. Louis that receives or publishes news gathered by the Associated Press.

First White Child Votes.

WATERLOO, Ind., Aug. 29.—Mrs. Rebecca Fretz, the first white child born in De Kalb County, has exercised the right of suffrage. She was born Nov. 5, 1836. Her home is in Washington and she is here on a visit. Mrs. Fretz was married in De Kalb County in 1857.

POTATOES GROW ON SAME PLANTS WITH TOMATOES

Mixing of Blossom's Pollens Given as Explanation of Phenomena.

BRITTON, S. D., Aug. 29.—Plants with potatoes on their roots and tomatoes on their tops, raised here by H. E. Benson, may yet place him in the garden wizard class with the famous Burbank.

In appearance the plants are of the ordinary potato variety, but at their tops are large bulbs resembling tomatoes in both meat and seeds.

Whether or not these are the ordinary potato balls often seen, or a growth caused by the mixing of the pollen of the tomato and potato blossoms is not certain, although the latter explanation of the odd combination plant is believed to be the true one.

AMERICANS NOW SEEK MEXICAN INVESTMENTS

Oil, Mining and Cattlemen Are Reported Pouring Over Texas Border.

WELLINGTON, Tex., Aug. 29.—Since the end of the revolution in Mexico hundreds of men in West Texas who have oil and mining interests there are returning to resume their residence and prosecute their lines of industry. And hundreds of other men in this region, believing that Mexico offers manifold opportunities for investment are hurrying into the rich regions of that country. Seven in one party left Wellington recently. They were W. W. Sugg, Clarence Strong, Clarence Richardson, W. E. Cummings, W. F. Roberts, W. R. Patterson and L. D. Bartlett.

Returning travelers from border states in Mexico say indications point to indefinite peace in that republic and some of them are closing out their business in Texas preparatory to going there to remain permanently.

"I find that the Mexican people are satisfied wherever I talked to them," says a cattleman who has large ranch interests in Mexico. "They are tired of fighting and they believe that Carranza will bring good order and prosperity out of the chaos he has encountered."

Nearly all the big ranchmen of the Panhandle have some interests in Mexico. They look forward to unprecedented prosperity there in the livestock business.

Late Shipment From Europe

On July 31st our European representative succeeded in making a shipment of Millinery and several cases of Novelty Silks and Dress Goods, but since the above date no shipments have been made.

Custom House Records Will Show

That the B. Nugent & Bro. Dry Goods Company have received this season more direct shipments from Europe than any other retail house of St. Louis, thus making our stock the most complete in the city of

New Goods at Old Prices

Future shipments are uncertain and even if we should receive some, the prices must necessarily be advanced on account of the increased cost of Ocean Freight, War Insurance and Foreign Exchange.

Our Foreign Consular Invoices

Evidence that we have received for this season's business the following European Shipments.

47 Cases Toys.
36 Cases Dolls.
14 Cases Linens.
13 Cases Millinery.
10 Cases Baskets.
10 Cases Art Needlework.
11 Cases Toilet Articles.
5 Cases Jewelry.
5 Cases Leather Goods.

Men's Blue Serge Suits, $14.50

Tomorrow we place on sale an assortment of Blue Serge Suits at $14.50 which we consider one of the best value propositions ever made by us.

They are strictly all-wool Indigo dye serges, hand tailored in the prevailing styles for regular, stout or slim men.

This sale price is manufacturer's cost and even less in many instances and in view of the present market condition we feel perfectly safe in predicting that it will be some time before such a value can be presented again.

Many men, especially those who work indoors, wear clothes of these weights all the year round.

Any of these Suits are heavy enough to wear far into the Fall, even if you are out of doors all the time.

TWO DOG CATCHERS WILL BE TRIED FOR LASSOING WOMAN

Policemen Arrest Men in Tailor's Yard With Wire Around His Wife's Neck.

PURSUED HIDDEN PET

Dog's Owner Says She Tried to Keep Intruders From Destroying Property and Was Hit.

Frank Wilkins, 22 years old, 630 Chouteau avenue, and John McCaffrey, 25 years old, 1106 Chouteau avenue, city dog catchers, will be tried in Dayton Police Court tomorrow morning on charges of disturbing the peace, as the result of their alleged attack on Mrs. Ida Diamond, 35 years old, of 1711 Franklin avenue, yesterday morning, while they were trying to catch a dog in the yard at the rear of her home.

The catchers had their wire lasso around Mrs. Diamond's neck when patrolmen arrived. The men protested against being arrested, asserting that the police had no right to arrest city dog catchers.

Wilkins and Caffrey had been on the street trying to catch a small dog, when it ran through a passageway into the back yard of the house where Mrs. Diamond lives. Mrs. Diamond's story of her encounter with them is this!

She was standing in the rear of the house near a back stairway, when the dog dashed in. Harry Aulsbury, 12 years old, who lives next door, was in the yard and to keep the dog from being caught shoved it through a hole in a small shed under the stairs.

The catchers followed immediately afterward, and began to break open the the shed, which was locked, to get the dog. When Mrs. Diamond remonstrated with them for destroying property, one of the men attacked her, hitting her twice in the chest, and the other threw his wire lasso about her neck.

Her husband, Jacob Diamond, a tailor, who was in the yard, then took a hand in the proceedings and attempted to interfere, but was sent staggering by several blows from the other dog catcher. Just as he went out the back way to call for the police, two policemen, attracted by the woman's screams, arrived.

Mrs. Diamond followed the prisoners to the Carr Street Station, where the charges of disturbing the peace were lodged against them. Her neck is scratched and she is bruised as a result of being hit and having the lasso about her neck.

G. A. R. ENTERTAINMENT AT DETROIT'S EXPENSE

Special Tax Levy to Pay the Way for Big Encampment This Week.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 29.—All arrangements for entertaining the Grand Army of the Republic, at the expense of the Detroit taxpayers, for the forty-eighth annual encampment Aug. 31 to Sept. 5, have been completed.

For several months, since the City Council acquiesced in a proposal by Mayor Oscar B. Marx that a special tax levy of 3 cents on every $1000 of taxable property be made to raise funds for entertaining the veterans, 200 business and professional men have been working out the entertainment.

Souvenir programs and badges, representing an outlay of over $12,000, will be handed to the veterans.

It is estimated that there will be about 25,000 visitors. In addition to the G. A. R. gathering there will be the annual encampment of the Ladies of the G. A. R., the Woman's Relief Corps, the Daughters of Veterans, the Association of Army Nurses of the Civil War, the Sons of Veterans, the Sons of Veterans' Auxiliary, the National Association of Naval Veterans, and the National Association of Union Ex-Prisoners of War.

16 DEPUTY SHERIFFS TO JOIN COURTHOUSE FORCE

Dickmann Consolidates Duties and Transfers Men From Municipal Building.

Sixteen Deputy Sheriffs now on duty at the Municipal Courts Building to serve summonses for jurors and witnesses in the criminal courts will be transferred to the Courthouse Sept. 8 for duty at that place. Thereafter all the work of serving jurors and witnesses in both civil and criminal cases will be handled at the Sheriff's office at the Courthouse.

This is a departure from a system which has been in force for years by which one group of deputies handled criminal writs and another civil writs. Enough deputies will be kept at the Municipal Courts to serve warrants and to act as court room bailiffs.

Sheriff Dickmann decided to make the change on advice of his son, Joseph Dickmann Jr., chief deputy, who believes the new system will result in better efficiency. The son said yesterday he first thought of the change a few weeks ago. He was sitting in front of his home and saw a deputy Sheriff from the civil department serve a summons at a house on one side of the street. Five minutes later a deputy from the criminal branch came along with a jury summons to serve at a house on the opposite side of the same street.

Laclede Papin will have charge of the criminal service and Joseph Schilling of the civil business. Both will be at the Courthouse.

This Week We Shall Feature Boys' and Girls' Fall Apparel, Shoes, Etc., for School Wear in Addition to Many New Things for Fall That Are Now Ready for the Grown-Ups

With school opening in most of the schools next week, lots of parents will devote this week to supplying their children with new Fall Clothing, Hats, Shoes, Stockings, and other needed articles for school wear. Consequently, we are devoting a considerable amount of space in this advertisement to juvenile lines of merchandise particularly suitable for this purpose, and which we now have on display and sale.

We are, too, listing some of the new arrivals in Women's Fall Suits, Coats, Dresses, Silks, Dress Goods, Laces, Trimmings, etc., all of which will be in increasing demand from now on.

Special attention is also directed to the fact that Monday will be the last day of both our August Sale of Furs and August Clearance Sale of Pianos and Player-pianos.

Some Choice Lots of Women's Fall Suits and Coats Are Ready

During the past week we have received large additions to our stock of Women's Suits and Coats for Autumn wear and we are ready, even now, to offer you choice from an exceptionally large assortment of the newest styles, materials and colors of the season.

A Word About Our New Suits

Among our inexpensive new Fall Suits are those in the Redingote and Russian styles of serge, broadcloth and gaberdine. These are most effectively trimmed with velvet and braid, while the skirts are made on the very newest lines in yoke and plaited effects and in the Russian-tunic style. Choice may be had from black, navy, green, seal brown or plum; sizes 34 to 48. Prices $16.50 to $27.50

For those who desire a Suit at a medium price, we are offering an especially good variety of semi-tailored, tailored and the more elaborate models in caracul and broadcloth combinations, serges, gaberdines, etc. These garments are effectively trimmed with broadtail cloth, plain and fancy velvets, braid and with vestee effects.

The skirts show the circular-tunic and side-plaited style with yoke. Choice of Hunter's green, Tete de Negre, Burgundy, navy and black. Prices $28.50 to $75.00

Have a Coat Ready for Cool Days

Among the new Fall Coats for general wear are some very stylish and inexpensive ones of novelty tweeds, plaids and coatings in three-quarter length. These are made on loose, box lines, as well as in semi-tailored effects. Some are trimmed while others are plain tailored; lined and unlined. Prices $12.75 to $28.50

For street and afternoon wear, we are showing Coats and Cape-Coats of broadcloth, zibeline and novelty materials, trimmed with fur, velvet and caracul cloth, and in such colors as navy, green and checks, as well as in black. These are priced at $30.00 to $50.00

We shall make, tomorrow, an initial showing of French model Hats. This is only a small lot—about 50 in all—which were received last week and which will be shown for the first time on Monday.

They are from the most representative houses in Paris and include creations of Georgette, Reboux, Marie Louise, Hermance, Saget and many others.

Our prices for these imported models range from $22.50 to $75.00

Third Floor.

Many New Silks and Velvets
Have Just Been Received From Europe

In accordance with our custom of displaying the new goods at the earliest possible moment, we shall have ready for your inspection tomorrow a number of foreign shipments of the most exclusive styles in Silks and Velvets.

The women of Saint Louis and vicinity have the opportunity of selecting now from as choice a stock as it has ever been our pleasure to show. Many entirely new weaves are on display in plain fabrics and special attention is called to the following:

Crepe Faille Sublime in the new street shades. This fabric is 40 inches wide and is priced at, the yard $4.00

Black Costume Velvets — 42 inches wide—are priced upwards from $4.00

Crepe Babylon is a reversible satin-faced fabric and is 40 inches wide. The yard $4.00

Chiffon Costume Velvet in the newest shades for Fall; 42 inches wide. Priced upwards from $5.00

Second Floor.

The Newest Trimmings for Fall
Find a Prominent Place Here

In our Trimming Department you will find our stock complete with all the newest effects in Drops, Tassels, Frogs, Garnitures, Embroidered and Beaded Flouncings in Jet, Gold, Silver, Pearl, Iridescent and dainty Pompadour Embroidered Flounces, Rope Trimmings of Jet, Crystal Venetian Bead Trimmings, new Galalite and many other novelties too numerous to mention.

As these goods are imported, they will probably be the last to reach this country until after conditions become settled in Europe. Early selections are, therefore, extremely essential.

Among some of the Novelties we are showing at this time are Pompadour Edgings for sleeve ruffles. The yard 85c and $1.25

Braid Novelties, Drops, Frogs and Tassels, for use in trimming tailored suits, are priced at 25c to $3.50

Novelty Bead Flouncings in crystal, gold, silver, jet and colored beads on black and colored grounds. The yard $3.50 to $25.00

Our Fur Sale Continued

Owing to the arrival of a large additional quantity of new Fur Coats, Sets and individual Fur Pieces, we have decided to continue our Fourth August Sale of Furs until next Saturday evening.

Full particulars will be found in tomorrow's Republic and Globe-Democrat.

Here Are Some of the New Dress Goods That Are Ready for Fall

Many of those who have Fall dressmaking to do will, no doubt, desire to purchase their materials at this time and, consequently, will be glad to know that we are showing an excellent variety of both imported and domestic Woolens in the new weaves, patterns and colors for Fall. We have, for instance:

French Bengalines—all wool—in a very complete range of the new Fall shades. This material is suitable for school dresses, house wear, etc. The yard 50c

Fancy Plaids are shown in mixtures of greens, blues and "illuminated" effects, which will be in great demand this season. The yard $1.00

Imported French Serges and Poplins — strictly all-wool—can be had in navy, green, brown, plum, etc. The yard $1.25

Chiffon Broadcloth of beautiful finish and 54 inches wide, can be had in all the most desirable shades for this season and in black. The yard $2.00

The new Roman stripes are ready, for use in smart combination effects. This material is 54 inches wide, is all-wool and can be had in green and blue, blue and red, etc. Yard $2.00

54-inch Imported Golfines in navy, brown, green, maroon and black. This will be one of the most eagerly sought materials of the season. The yard $2.50

AMERICAN TELLS OF WAR-MAD MOB IN ST. PETERSBURG

Paterson (N. J.) Physician Saw German Embassy Wrecked Following War Declaration.

TOURISTS IN NEW YORK

Senator James' Wife Was Sent to Copenhagen From Berlin and Sailed on Freighter.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—Dr. Charles Ritter of Paterson, N. J., one of the 1762 passengers aboard the Adriatic, in today from England, described the kindling of the war fever in St. Petersburg.

"When we got there," he said, "the city was under martial law. Cossacks were riding up and down the streets. Every train which arrived poured out hordes of soldiers from the country. Although the officials theoretically paid for everything they seized it amounted to absolute confiscation in practice. One man, for instance, owned a string of race horses valued at $100,000. They were all taken for the army, and he received about $100.

"I went out to the winter palace on August 2. There must have been at least 40,000 people there. After the proclamation had been read, the Czar, Czarina and other members of the royal family stood out on the balcony, overlooking the crowd for at least 20 minutes.

Wrecks German Embassy.

"Two days later a mob which must have numbered many thousands surged through the streets of St. Petersburg. They finally stopped in front of the German Embassy. On the top of this building there are two huge statues of Uhlans. About a hundred of the mob climbed up to the roof and broke the statues with sledge hammers.

"This was the sign for the whole mob to get busy. They swarmed through the building, smashing everything they could. On one of the floors they found a Russian footman. He had been stabbed three times and apparently had been dead for several hours.

"We at last managed to get a train to Wolgda on August 4. By tipping a railway official liberally, I secured a car exclusively for our party. So great was the mob at the station that six people were pushed under the wheels of the train and killed as the train pulled out."

The Olympic also arrived with 1772 passengers from English cities.

When she reached her dock in the North River stewards were set at work to remove hundreds of sheets of heavy black oiled paper that had been placed over every window, porthole and door. Windows on the van deck had a heavy coat of black paint over them. Not a ray of light was allowed to show outside the Olympic during her voyage. The liner brought nearly 5000 bags of mail.

Mrs. Ollie James Returns.

Among the passengers on the Olympic was Mrs. Ollie James, wife of United States Senator James of Kentucky. Mrs. James said she was in Berlin the day before war was declared.

'Ambassador Gerard got accommodations for us on the finest train leaving Berlin for the Russian frontier," said Mrs. James. "We thought we were well on our way, when the train suddenly pulled into Copenhagen. None of the passengers on board had been informed that the train had been diverted. We never were told why it had been done.

"I remained in Copenhagen four days while awaiting a chance to cross to London. Finally I and 24 other Americans got aboard a small freight steamer, and though mines had been strewn along the coast, we went through without mishap."

Senator James boarded the Olympic at Quarantine from a revenue cutter.

Senator Oliver of Pennsylvania, another passenger, was in Switzerland, with his wife and grandchild, when Austria declared war on Servia. He and his family hurried to Paris, and thence to London, reaching the French coast with much difficulty.

Shonts Sees Prosperity.

Theodore P. Shonts, president of the Interborough Rapid Transit Co. of New York, was in Austria when that country declared war on Servia. He hurried with his daughters to Paris. There he became a member of the committee formed to care for Americans.

"When I left Paris there were, roughly speaking, between 1500 and 2000 Americans who were in urgent need of help," Mr. Shonts said. "This is the greatest opportunity the United States ever has had. The next month should see the entire nation engaged in caring for a tremendous commerce. The whole country should become rich."

Daniel Guggenheim was aboard. He ran out of money while in Paris, and his son in the United States cabled him $5000.

TALEBEARER IS ARRESTED

Roommate of Ex-Convict Held Under California Law.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 29.—The first arrest in the history of the State under the statute which makes it a misdemeanor to give information to any employer that an employe has served time in prison, was made here yesterday.

Peter Wirt, sentenced in Los Angeles to a year in San Quentin for assault with a deadly weapon, complained to his parole officer that his roommate, Frederick Schroeder, a painter, had informed their landlady against him. The parole officer had Schroeder arrested and appeared against him in court. Decision was reserved.

The Great September Lace Curtain Sale

Always great, in the true sense of the word, the September Lace Curtain Sale this year assumes greater proportions than ever.

There are many reasons why this sale is greater than ever—mainly because of the present condition of the world's markets.

There are probably no more than three or four stores IN THE ENTIRE UNITED STATES which could duplicate the offerings and prices in this Lace Curtain Sale at this time.

We KNOW that no other St. Louis store can at this time, or will in the near future, be supplied so as to make possible the offering of such lots as are presented in this Lace Curtain Sale, values not even considered.

In fact, the markets are in such chaotic condition, that were we not as usual disposed to give our patrons the benefit of fortunate buying transactions which we make from time to time, we could ship the entire $25,000 (retail valuation) stocks of September Sale Lace Curtains back to New York and sell them to importers at $25,000—or in other words at regular retail price.

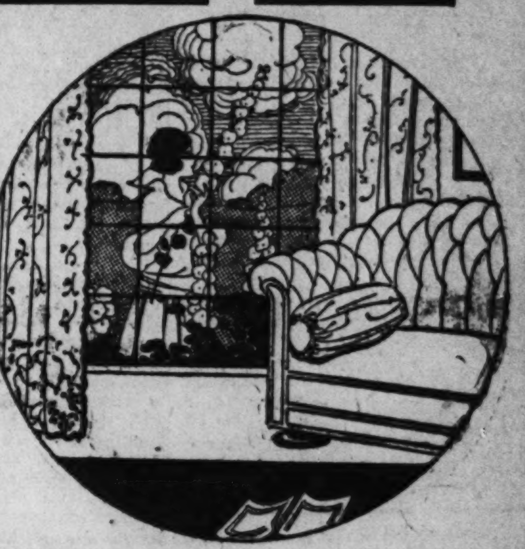
Our September Lace Curtain Sale purchases were made before the declaration of war.

Purchases made one week later by other stores were at prices 50% higher than prices at which we bought.

The law of supply and demand was never better illustrated.

The world's supply, temporarily at least, has been halted, but there is as great a demand as ever for Curtains such as these.

Surely, it is unnecessary for us to say more to convince St. Louis housewives of the extreme importance of this September Lace Curtain Sale.



It is indeed wonderful in the face of conditions related above that we can duplicate the assortments, the varieties and the values of September Curtain Sales of past years.

"CABIRIA" SAID TO BE MOTION-PICTURE MARVEL

D'Annunzio's Great Photoplay Comes to New Grand Central Sunday, Sept. 6.

"Cabira," the great photoplay written by Gabriele d'Annunzio, the Italian poet-dramatist, which comes to the New Grand Central Theater on Sunday, Sept. 6, for a two weeks' engagement, is said to be one of the most beautiful specimens of motion picture photography ever produced.

Parts of the film are made stereoscopic, giving them all the appearance of solidity and depth of the original subject. This effect is obtained by a patented device of the Italio Film Co., the producers. In parts, also, the picture is said to be superbly tinted and toned, and there are graphically realistic views of a volcanic eruption, burning ships, Alpine landscapes and the like. There are also many silhouetted effects.

The production as a whole requires two and three-quarter hours for its presentation.

Illinois State Senator Dead.

QUINCY, Ill., Aug. 29.—Campbell S. Hearne, State Senator since 1904, following an illness due to paralysis, died at his home here last night. He served as a volunteer soldier in the Confederate army.

"NEPTUNE'S DAUGHTER" HAS MANY BIG THRILLS

One of the most thrilling scenes in "Neptune's Daughter," the feature-film spectacle starring Annette Kellermann, which will open the Victoria Theater season next Sunday afternoon, shows Miss Kellermann in the title role hurled from a 65-foot cliff into the sea, bound hand and foot.

The production as a whole is said to have given Miss Kellermann, who posed for it in the Bermudas, unlimited opportunity to reveal her wonderful skill and grace as a swimmer and diver. Bermuda, with its sunshine and flowers, also provides a beautiful scenic setting for the play's story.

In addition to the evening performances, popular price matinees will be given daily.

Kills Wife on Drive, Shoots Self.

OLYMPIA, Wash., Aug. 29.—J. D. Gladney, 45 years old, who disappeared last spring after attempting to kill his wife, returned unexpectedly last night, compelled his wife and her daughter by a former marriage, Miss Pansy Coates, 19 years old, to enter a buggy with him and, after driving about town, shot and killed his wife and then committed suicide. Miss Coates leaped from the buggy and gave the alarm.

Our business in Barton & Guestier Wines and Olive Oil, Sandeman Port and Sherry, Gordon Gins, etc., etc., is ultimately with the American Gentleman in his home—his club—his hotel.

We desire to publicly express our appreciation of the co-operation of the leading houses of the country in maintaining moderate prices to consumers during the recent panic for supplies of imported brands.

We intend to support this policy with all our resources, for Americans will have their share of the burden of the war.

About $6,000 per day is refunded to American purchasers of Gordon Gins in duty paid to the U. S. Treasury (50c. per bottle), reducing other taxes by that amount.

In war time, with war insurance, higher freights and expenses, business cannot be carried on at peace basis, but no prices will be extreme.

B. & G. Wines, Gordon Gins, etc., are coming forward in usual quantities, and there is no reason why the American Gentleman cannot procure supply for his home, his club, at his hotel, or elsewhere.

COLUMBIA SEASON OPENS TOMORROW WITH LARGE BILL

Topline Feature Is "Neptune's Garden of Living Statues" Other Attractions.

VAUDEVILLE. Columbia. Season opens with tomorrow's matinee. Bill headed by "Neptune's Garden of Living Statues," described as a beautiful and original aquatic spectacle, with startling water illusions, and including a pantomimic drama, with music, entitled "The Enchanted Pool." It will be presented by a company headed by Carlo Casetta and Lillian Lestors and containing 20 dancers, pantomimists, divers and water nymphs.

An extra and timely feature of the opening bill will be Burton Holmes' "War Time Europe" pictures, accompanied by a special lecturer, these coming direct from their Chicago premiere, and including intimate motion pictures of the Czar of Russia, the German Kaiser and the Austrian Emperor, with their fighting forces of land, sea and sky.

Other features are Imhoff, Conn and Coreene, in a bit of farce entitled "Surgeon Louder, U. S. A.; Herbert Williams and Hilda Wolfus, in a musical travesty entitled "Almost a Pianist;" Dorothy Meuther, singing comedienne; Hubert Dyer, assisted by Peter Alvin, in comic agility on the flying rings; Bill Pruitt, "the Montana Caruso," and McMahon, Diamond and Clemence, in an entertaining sketch entitled "The Scarecrow."

VAUDEVILLE. Hippodrome. Opening tomorrow. Bill headed by the Five Kaiche Japanese Troupe, in thrilling feats of tumbling, hand-balancing, juggling and tight-rope walking. Other features are the Carroll and Pierlot company, in a comedy entitled "I Died;" LaBell and BeGar, European acrobatic comiques; the Four Slickers, in comedy songs; D'Arville and Dutton, in a comedy sketch entitled "The Man Next Door;" Fisk and Fallon, in songs and dances; Sylvia, in songs, and one other big act.

"WINNING OF BARBARA WORTH." American. Dramatized version of Harold Bell Wright's popular novel. Tells story of how two men, both worth while, battle for a woman, and of how her love is won. The play is rich in picturesque character and dramatic interest. Its more striking scenic features include an impressive representation of the great desert of "The Hollow of God's Hand" and of the vast irrigation works on the Colorado River.

"A WOMAN'S WAY." Park Theater. Opening of Park dramatic season, with The Players, its new legitimate drama company, in Grace George's great success. The organization is headed by Mitchell Harris, leading man, and Marion Ruckert, leading woman, both of established reputations. Harris is a nephew of Maggie Mitchell, a famous actress of the past generation. The company as a whole is said to be of excellent quality. It will present many big Eastern successes never before offered at popular prices. Matinees Wednesdays and Saturdays. Will alternate weekly with Park Opera Co. between the Park and Shenandoah theaters.

"THE CHOCOLATE SOLDIER." Shenandoah. Presented by Park Opera Co., with same cast as that which appeared at the Park Theater last week, including Carl Haydn, Eleanor Henry, Louise Allen, James Stevens, Margaret Crawford, Charles Huntington, Billy Kent, Maud K. Williams and others Matinees Wednesdays and Saturdays.

VAUDEVILE. Grand. Bill headed by Margaret Sawtell Duffy and her Eight Peachy Girls in "The Big Surprise," announced as an effervescing musical, dancing and humorous novelty that has scored big [illegible] in Chicago and other cities. Other features are Torelli's Dog ang Pony Circus; General Pisano, the Italian sharpshooter, in feats of marksmanship, with the Bay of Tripoli bombarded by an Italian fleet as a scenic background; Sylvester and Vance, in a comedy sketch entitled "Get Out of My Theater;" Burns and Acker, singing and talking; Hoier and Boggs, in "The Girl Behind the Counter;" the Burks, juggling humorists; Jack Case, "that funny fellow;" Le Grange and Gordon, novelty musicians. and the Universal animated weekly motion pictures and five other first-run reels.

VAUDEVILLE. Forest Park Highlands. This being the last week of the Highlands season, closing with Labor day, Sept. 7, the theatorium bill is to be devoted exclusively to St. Louis vaudeville acts, six in number. Cavallo's band concerts, three times daily. Swimming pool, dancing and amusement concessions.

ARTHUR PRYOR'S BAND. Delmar Garden. Famous organization composed of 50 instrumental soloists. "The Post-Dispatch March," composed by Arthur Pryor several years ago, and since that time included in his programs all over America and Europe, also played at "special command" performances before King George of England and Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany, will be a feature of next Friday evening's concert. Solos by Bert Brown, cornet; Louis Rossi, piccolo; Simone Mantia, "pryorophone," and Arthur Pryor himself, most famous of trombone soloists, Friday afternoon and evening. Request numbers on Thursday. This is the third and last week of the Pryor engagement.

"THE PHONY DETECTIVES." Princess. Lewis and Dody in a musical farce said to be uproariously funny. Company includes Florence Belmont, Eddie Nelson, Florence Talbot, formerly of the vaudeville stage, Marcelle Charle and others. Daily matinees at 2:30. Evening performances at 8:30.

"THE GAY WIDOWS." Standard. Will present two original musical comedies entitled "A Hot Night," and "Hotel New Point Comfort," also clever vaudeville. Company includes James E. Daily, comedian; Joe Taylor, German comedian; Bill Armstrong, tramp comedian, and others.

"MY FRIEND FROM KENTUCKY." Gayety. Presented by J. Leubrie Hill's colored company, the Darktown Follies of 1914, including Harper and Gillam, champion comedians; Gaines and Brown, Sallie Burd Gillam, Evon Robinson, Ada Guy, Abbie Mitchell, Toots Davis, Ethel Williams, daughter of Bert Williams, and others, also a big singing and dancing chorus.

"THE VILLAGE PARSON." Mannion's Park. Presented by Stanley Stock Co., with Arthur Stanley in the title role and Miss Ella Allen as his associate star.

Boy Hurt at Eads Bridge Sues.

Clarence Penrod, through his mother, Mrs. Clara Penrod, as best friend, filed suit in the City Court at East St. Louis, yesterday, against the East St. Louis Railway Co. for $10,000 damages for injuries alleged to have been received March 19, 1914, at Broadway at the east end of the Eads bridge.

Lung Trouble Yielded to This Medicine

If you are suffering with serious lung trouble, it will pay to fully investigate Eckman's Alterative, a remedy which has caused many recoveries. One follows:—

5323 Girard Av., Phila., Pa.

"Gentlemen:—In the winter of 1903 I had an attack of Grippe, followed by Pneumonia, and later by Lung Trouble. In the winter of 1904 I had a cough, night sweats, fever and raised quantities of awful-looking stuff and later I had many hemorrhages; at one time three in three successive days. Three physicians treated me. I was ordered to the mountains, but did not go. Eckman's Alterative was recommended by a friend. After taking a small quantity I had the first quiet night's sleep for weeks. My improvement was marked from the first. I gained strength and weight and appetite. I never had another hemorrhage and my cough gradually lessened until entirely gone. I am perfectly well. (Abbreviated.)

(Affidavit). ANNIE F. LOUGHRAN.

Eckman's Alterative is most efficacious in bronchial catarrh and severe throat and lung affections and upbuilding the system. Contains no harmful or habit-forming drugs. Accept no substitutes. Small size, $1; regular size, $2. Sold by Raboteau Drug Co., Wolff-Wilson Drug Co., Judge & Dolph Drug Co. and leading druggists. Write Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet of recoveries.

"QUEEN OF THE MOVIES" OPENS OLYMPIC SEPT. 20

Broadway Playhouse Redecorated and Thoroughly Equipped With Safety Devices.

Announcement now is made that the Olympic Theater, entirely redecorated and equipped with all the safety devices suggested by the Building Commissioner of St. Louis, will begin its season on Sunday evening, Sept. 20, with Thomas W. Ryley's English musical comedy, "The Queen of the Movies," as the opening attraction.

This piece still is running in London and will be presented at the Olympic by the same American company with which it scored its all-season run in New York City last year. It will be remembered that Manager Ryley brought "Florodora" to this country, and it is believed that "The Queen of the Movies" will give him a similar success.

Among other early attractions will be Raymond Hitchcock in "The Beauty Shop," Rock and Fulton in "The Candy Shop," "Seven Keys to Baldpate," "The Yellow Ticket," "The Little Cafe," "Prince of Pilsen," the Stratford-upon-Avon players, "Everywoman," Margaret Anglin in a revival of "Lady Windermere's Fan," "Nearly Married," "Potash & Perlmutter," Fannie Ward in "Madame President," George Arliss in "Disraeli," Henry W. Savage's great musical success, "Sari"; George Evans' Honey Boy Minstrels, Fiske O'Hara in a new play entitled "Jack's Romance," and the Liebler company's biggest production, "Joseph and His Brethren."

In addition to its new and complete safety equipment, the Olympic has been greatly beautified. The lobby walls are hung in green velvet. The walls of the lower floor and boxes are covered with green figured damask tapestry. All various earlier colors have been replaced with light and clean colors. The theater as it stands has been pronounced by Building Commissioner McKelvey as safe in every respect as it can be made.

Manager Walter Sanford announces that regular season subscribers now may renew their seat reservations by addressing him through the mails.

Camp Meeting in County.

A camp meeting began Thursday at Marvin Park, on the St. Charles electric line, and is to continue until next Sunday. It is in charge of Evangelist S. B. Shaw of Grand Rapids, Mich., assisted by Mrs. Etta Sadler Shaw, C. W. Sherman, T. H. Agnew, G. G. Yeoman, George Taylor and others. The management is in the hands of six trustees, representing different denominations, with Shaw as President.

The DOCTOR'S ADVICE

by Dr. Lewis Baker

Miss O. M. asks: "I have pimples, oily skin, and suffer from constipation, headache, and never feel strong and well please prescribe for me."

Answer: You should overcome constipation and cleanse the system of accumulated poisons by taking three-grain sulpherb tablets (not sulphur) for several weeks or more. These tablets are very beneficial, especially in hot weather, as they have a tendency to cool the blood and improve its quality.

"Poorly" writes: "Being past middle age and observing that my nervous system is in bad shape, I write for a prescription. I do not gain strength from my food, am weak, listless, forgetful, sleepless at times, tired, and unable to act the part of a strong man of health, such as I was at one time."

Answer: Get from a well-stocked pharmacy a sealed tube of 3-grain cadomene tablets, which are especially made for those needing a strong, harmless, rejuvenating tonic. Astonishing and pleasing results follow and life and hope are renewed.

"A Fat Woman" asks: "Would you please prescribe a safe reducing remedy for too much fat?"

Answer: At this season many fat people suffer greatly from the heat as you do, and to all I recommend that they reduce with 5-grain arbolone tablets, the most successful and convenient prescription I know of. Druggists supply in sealed tubes with full directions.

The questions answered below are general in character, the symptoms or diseases are given and the answers will apply in any case of similar nature.

Those wishing further advice, free may address Dr. Lewis Baker, College Bldg., College-Ellwood sts., Dayton, O., enclosing self-addressed stamped envelope for reply. Full name and address must be given, but only initials or fictitious name will be used in my answers. The prescriptions can be filled at any well-stocked drug store. Any druggist can order of wholesaler.

Miss C. W. R. asks: "I have tried for two years to diet so as to increase my weight and improve the quality of my blood, but in vain. Please prescribe for me?"

Answer: Thin, scrawny bloodless people need assistance in absorbing nutrition from the food eaten, and for this particular purpose I always prescribe three-grain hypo-nuclane tablets, a most effective preparation if regularly and persistently used, as it seems to increase the red and white corpuscles of the blood thus affording health, strength and increased weight.

M. J. B. asks: "My hair is too oily and my scalp itches with dandruff and of late is combing out too much. What is a good treatment?"

Answer: Obtain plain yellow minyol from your druggist in 4 oz. jars and apply as per directions. This cleans, purifies, cools and invigorates the hair and scalp, thus stopping the death of the hair. Dandruff and itching are at once relieved. Men and women all over the country now use it regularly.

"Essex" writes: "What should I do to relieve a severe case of kidney and bladder disease? Have fever, chills, pains like rheumatism, and soreness in region of bladder."

Answer: For such symptoms as you describe, I prescribe my favorite formula under the name of balmwort tablets. This is a splendidly efficacious remedy for such abnormal conditions. Begin their use at once as per directions on each sealed tube. —ADVERTISEMENT.

For Blood Eruptions That Linger for Years

How They Are Closed, Cleansed and Healed Never to Return.

Almost anywhere you go people become joyfully reminiscent to tell you how years ago they used S. S. S. for blood eruptions and were entirely cured. This famous medicine removed all impurities, put the blood in fine healthy condition so that pimples, boils, rash, eczema and all eruptive conditions just naturally ceased.

And these people to this day enjoy clear, healthy complexions because S. S. S. went to the sources of impure blood, drove out the acids that cause rheumatism, cleared the membranes of catarrhal infection, assisted the kidneys, lungs and liver to excrete, burn and expel poisons in the blood. Nor does it matter what its nature or by what name it is known, S. S. S. drives it out if it is a blood trouble, and most ill health is a blood sickness.

Even those defiant cases that resist such strong drugs as mercury, arsenic or iodide of potash gave way completely to the overpowering effect of S. S. S. in the blood.

It is acceptable to even very weak [illegible] getting rid of disfiguring blood eruptions. The action of S. S. S. is direct; it works outwardly in accordance with nature's tendencies. As an illustration take for example a blind boil or blood rising.

The action of S. S. S. is such that flesh forming material is rapidly deposited around its edges, they crowd quickly to the center where the skin flakes off leaving a new healthy covering beneath.

Now, this same process goes on all over the body since S. S. S. circulates with the blood wherever it flows. These interesting facts are more fully explained in a book written by a specialist which is mailed free by the makers of S. S. S., The Swift Specific Co., 29 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Ask at any drug store for a bottle of S. S. S., but don't accept a substitute. The medical department of The Swift Specific Co. has been of inestimable value to blood sufferers in successfully directing them to complete recovery. And this advice is entirely free, very complete and a splendid aid to all who are in doubt and perplexed about their trouble. —ADV.

ANTI-SAFE ROBBING PROMOTER HELD ON FORGERY CHARGES

Iowan's Arrest Follows Cashing of Checks for Pajamas, Cigars and Bonbons.

Two informations charging forgery in the second degree were issued yesterday against a man who said he was Frank J. Whittemore of Des Moines, Io., promoter of the Safe Robbing Preventative Co.

Whittemore was arrested Friday on complaint of several merchants that he had issued checks against the Safe Robbing Preventative Co. for small purchases that were not honored at the banks. The checks, about a dozen in number, were for $10 or less and were exchanged for silk pajamas at Nugents, business cards at Skinner & Kennedy's, cigars at the Stickney Cigar Co., bonbons at the Eden Candy Co., and similar purchases.

Whittemore told Chief of Detectives Allender that he had intended to deposit funds to cover the checks he issued as soon as he got his company "going." He explained that he had acquired the patent rights and the formula of a strange liquid for $1000, by means of which he hoped to make safe cracking a forgotten art.

His plan is to fill a flat-sided bottle with the liquid and place it in a safe. When a robber succeeds in opening the door the liquid would explode, according to Whittemore, injuring the robber or at least spreading the alarm. The company is not "a going concern" as yet, Whittemore told Allender, and he was unable to redeem the checks he had issued.

Whittemore will be held under the information issued yesterday and other informations will be applied for. He maintained an office in the Real Estate Exchange Building, and lived at the La Salle Hotel. A stenographer, Miss Lillian Geil, called at police headquarters to see Whittemore shortly after his arrest and demanded $51 back salary, which she said was due her. Whittemore had very little cash when arrested and the girl departed without compensation after declining to accept a check for the amount.

PLANS ANNIVERSARY FETE FOR SHAW'S GARDEN

Director G. T. Moore Expects Noted Scientists to Attend Big Botanical Meeting.

The most important botanical meet of the year will be the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Missouri Botanical Garden—Shaw's Garden—as a city institution. Dr. George T. Moore, director, has planned a program that will make it impossible for some of the foreign eminent scientists to attend.

Dr. J. Briquet, director of the Conservatoure et du Jardin Botaniques de la Ville Geneve, Geneva, Switzerland, who is also a Lieutenant in the French army, sent Do. Moore his regrets that he would not be able to attend the anniversary, as he had joined his regiment. However, it is expected that representatives from Holland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Italy, Japan and Canada will be present.

Dr. Moore is now establishing a "Shaw Museum" in the parlors of the "Shaw Country Home," the "House with the tower in the grove," from which the section of the city known as Tower Grove received its name. Furniture, portraits and such personal belongings of the late Henry Shaw as can be collected are now being placed in this building. One interesting article was the revolver which Shaw carried. It is a Colt's—Missouri Dragoon—16 inches long, six chambers. It was loaded with six round bullets of soft lead, which flattened when shot through 12 sheets of newspaper. It was supposed to have remained loaded since Shaw's death, 25 years ago.

The feature of the plant houses this week is a banana tree, which is now in bud and will soon be in blossom. This will be one of the interesting plants for nature study classes.

CIVIC LEAGUE WARY OF STATE AMENDMENT NO. 1

Special Committeee Fears It Would Destroy Missouri Iniative and Referendum.

That the proposed constitutional amendment No. 1, to be voted on in November, virtually will destroy the initiative and referendum in Missouri is the argument presented by the Civic League for the defeat of that amendment by the voters.

A pamphlet mailed yesterday to the league's 2200 members, to civic organizations and to all newspapers in the State, sets forth arguments against the amendment, carefully prepared by a special committee. The committee worked in collaboration with the National Popular Government League at Washington.

The league's members are asked to express their opinion, by postal card ballot, as to whether or not the league as an organization should oppose the submission of this amendment.

SALVATION ARMY CONGRES

It Will Be Described by Col. Cousins at Meeting Tonight.

Col. J. W. Cousins will speak in the Salvation Army hall, 11 South Seventh street, tonight at 8 o'clock and refer to the recent International Congress in London which was attended by delegations from Asia, Africa, Australia and almost every country in Europe, including English, Germans and French, who marched shoulder to shoulder through the streets only a few days before war was proclaimed.

Tomorrow has been proclaimed a day of prayer throughout the world in Salvation Army circles, that peace may speedily come to Europe.

MURDERER NOT TO HANG

Judge Substitutes Life Term on Ground of Insanity.

CHICAGO, Aug. 29.—The sentence of death imposed on Richard Schultz, convicted of the murder of Mrs. Elizabeth Healy, found dead with her throat cut in her home here last winter, was set aside today by Judge Brentano and life imprisonment substituted.

Judge Brentano held the evidence submitted at the trial which was held in his court, showed that Schultz was insane at the time of the killing. He had escaped some time before from the Kankakee Asylum.

GERMAN ADVANCE INCREDIBLY RAPID, ENGLISHMAN SAYS

RETREAT WAS HARASSED

Discipline of Allied Armies Praised, Stories of Panic Denied.

(Copyright, 1914, by Press Pub. Co.)

LONDON, Aug. 29.—A dispatch to the Times from Amiens, France, dated today, gives a connected account of the fighting in Northern France in the earlier part of the week. After praising the bravery of the British, it says:

"Since Monday morning last, the German advance has been one of almost incredible rapidity. The British force fought a terrible fight, which may be called the action of Mons, though it covered a big front. On Sunday the German attack was withstood to the utmost limit, and a whole division was flung into the fight, the end of a long march without time even to dig trenches

"French supporters were expected, but they did not seem to have been in touch, though whether or not they were many hours' late I cannot say.

Why French Retreated.

"Further to the right, the French, after a day's long gallant fighting, broke, and Namur fell.

"Gen. Joffre was forced to order a retreat along the whole line. The Germans fulfilled at that time one of the best of all the precepts in war, and never gave the retreating army one single moment's rest. The pursuit was immediate, relentless and unresting. Aeroplanes, Zeppelins, armored motors and cavalry were loosed like arrows from a bow and served at once to harass the retiring columns and keep the German staff fully informed of the movements of the allied forces.

"The British force fell back. Desperate fighting took place southward. Continually regiments were injured, and the army fought its way desperately, with many stands forced backward by sheer unconquerable mass of numbers of the enemy, prepared to throw away three or four men for the life of one British soldier.

"Tonight I write to the sound of guns. All afternoon guns were going on the eastern roads. A German aeroplane flew over us this morning and was brought crashing down.

"A royal engineer chauffeur told me that an axle of his car was broken and he had to abandon it. He had no more than left it when it also was blown up.

"Our losses are great. I have seen broken bits of my regiments.

"Let me repeat that there have been no failure in discipline, no panic, no throwing up the sponge. Everyone's temper is sweet, nerves do not show. A group of men, it may be a dozen or less or more, arrives under command of whoever is entitled to command it. The men are battered with marching and ought to be weak with hunger, for of course, no commissary could cope with such a case, but they march steadily and cheerfully, and wherever they arrive, they make straight for the proper authority, report themselves and seek news of their regiment.

French Staff's Error.

"It is clear that although the French general staff knew their eastern frontier defense has been so perfected as to force Germany to turn to the flank weak spot, although they knew also that not for nothing did Germany antagonize England, nevertheless they underestimated the force of the German blow through Belgium.

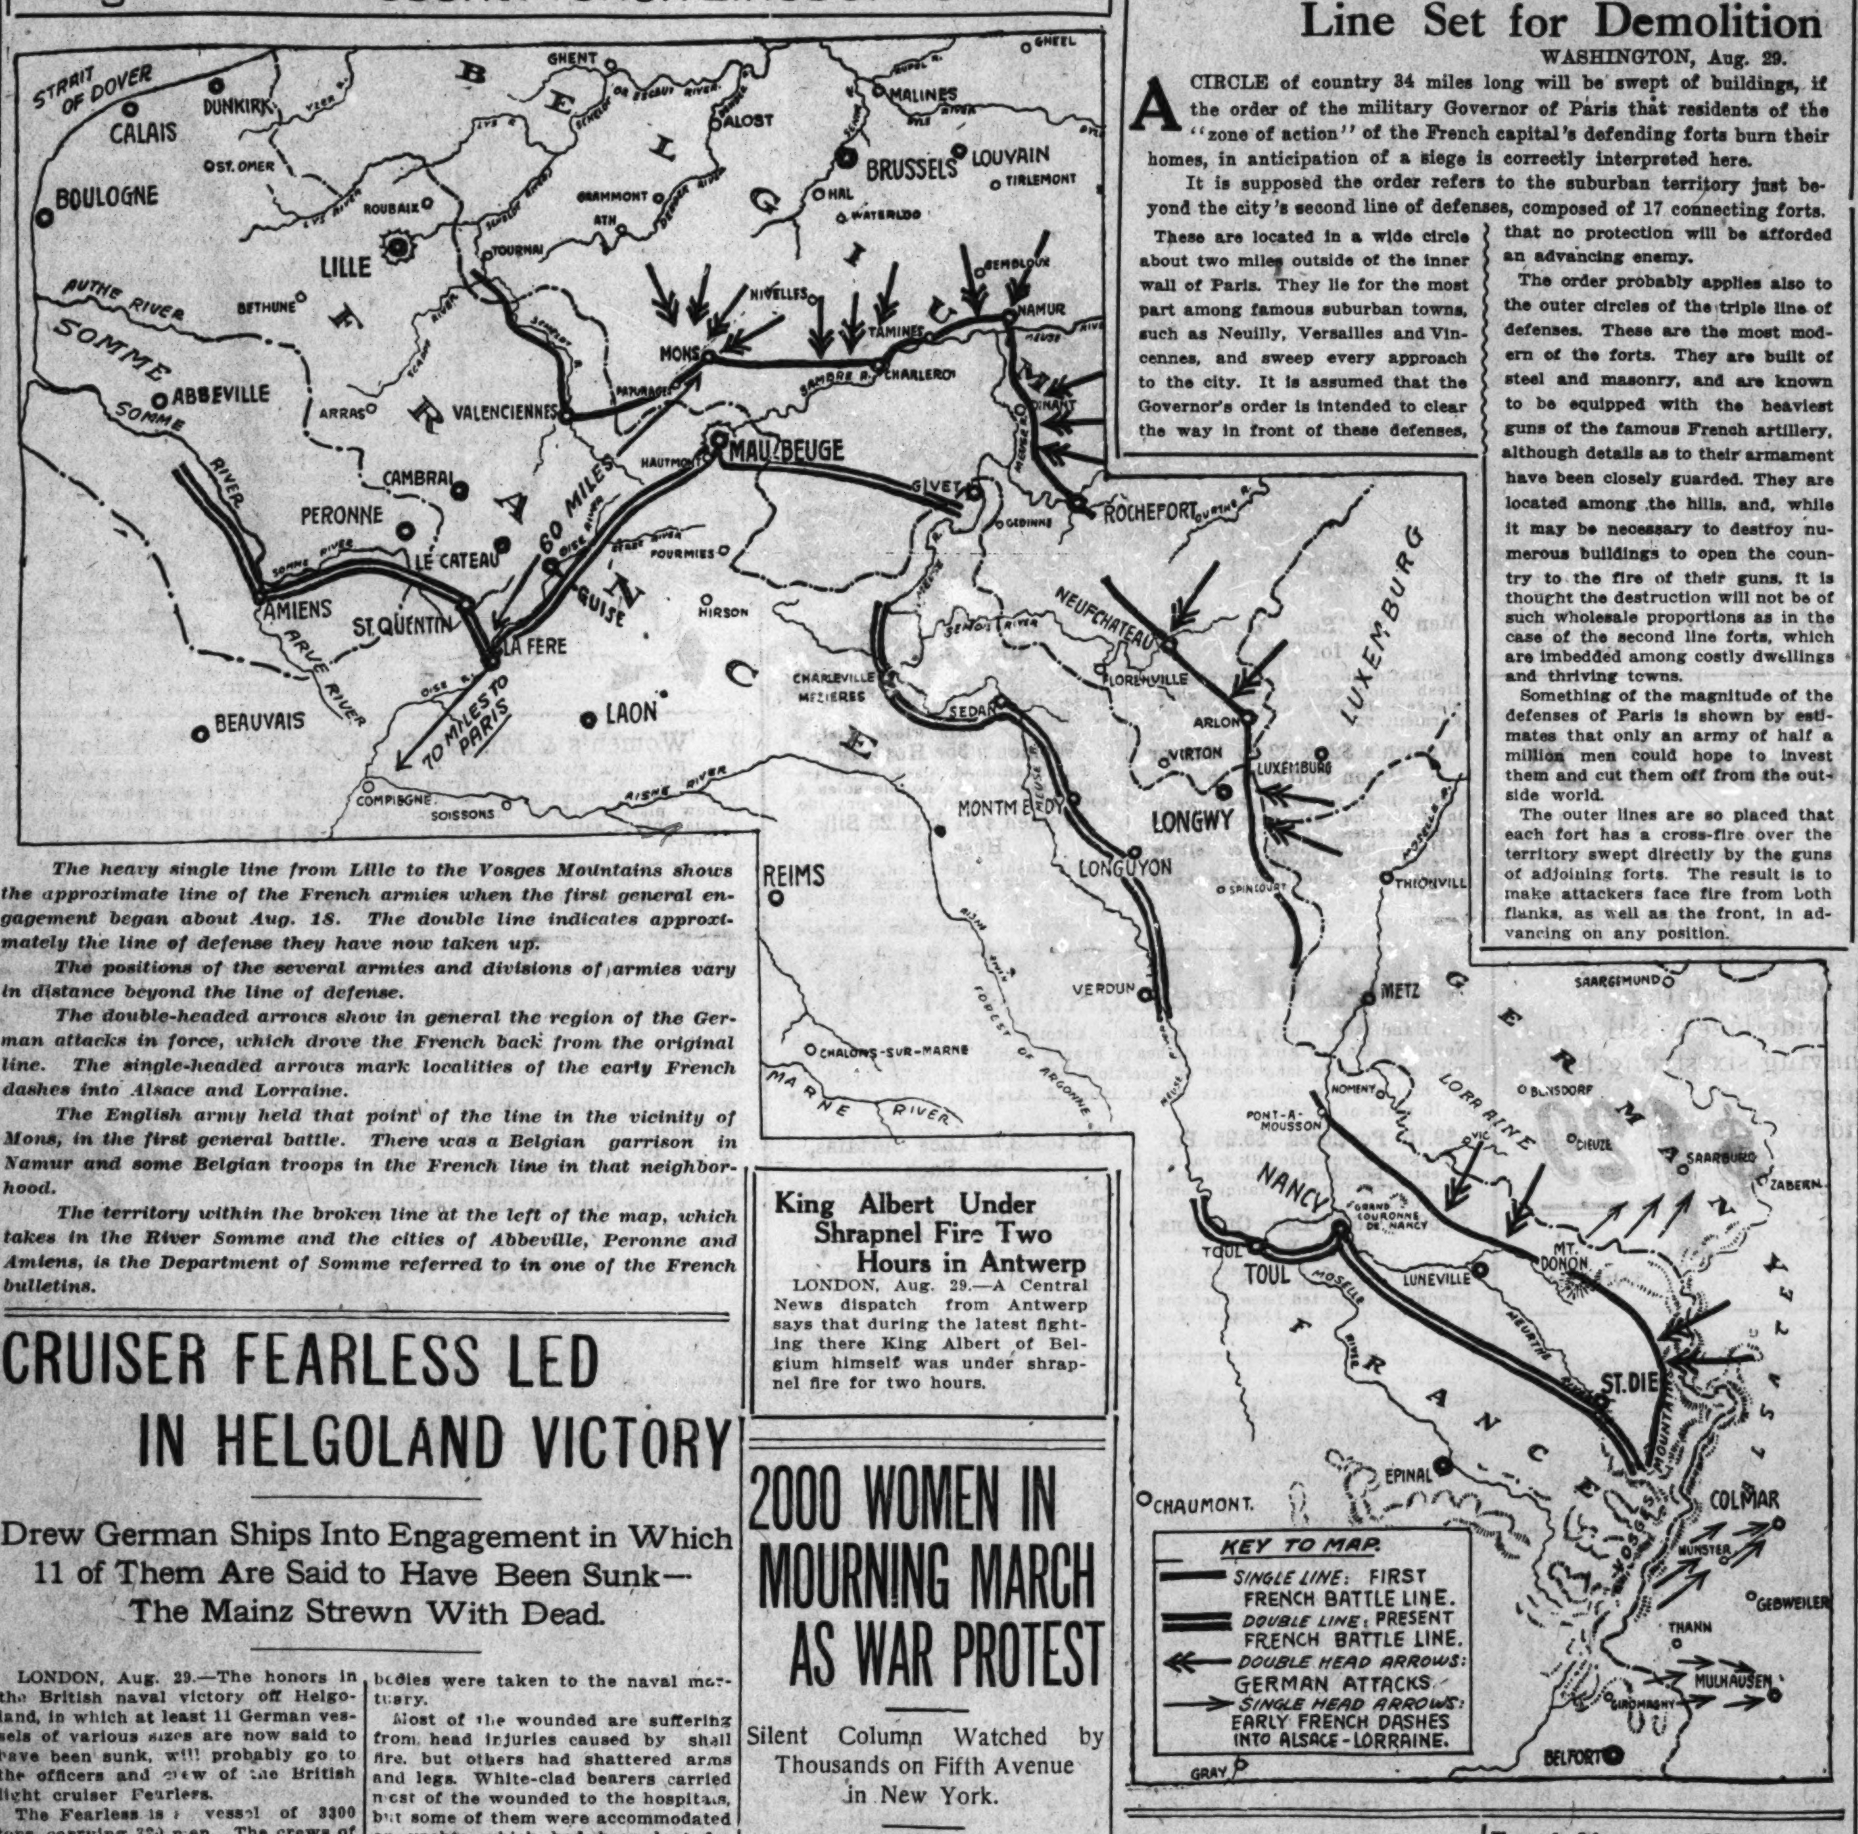
"All estimates of the number of German army corps in Belgium will need revision, and behind the screen in Alsace and Lorraine there were probably far fewer than supposed, else, perhaps, Muelhausen would not have had to be retaken twice.

"German commanders in the North advanced their men as if they had an inexhaustible supply. Of the bravery of the men it is not necessary to speak. They advanced in deep sections, so slightly extended as to be of almost in close order. With little regard for cover, they went rushing forward as soon as their own artillery had opened fire behind them on our position.

"Our artillery mows a long lane down the centers of their sections so frequently there was nothing left of it but its outsides, but no sooner is this done than more men double up, rushing over heaps of dead, and remake the section.

"Superiority of numbers in men and guns, especially in machine guns, a most successfully organized system of scouting by aeroplanes and Zeppelins, motors carrying machine guns, cavalry and extreme mobility are elements of the Germans' present success."

Original and Present French Lines of Defense



The heavy single line from Lille to the Vosges Mountains shows the approximate line of the French armies when the first general engagement began about Aug. 18. The double line indicates approximately the line of defense they have now taken up.

The positions of the several armies and divisions of armies vary in distance beyond the line of defense.

The double-headed arrows show in general the region of the German attacks in force, which drove the French back from the original line. The single-headed arrows mark localities of the early French dashes into Alsace and Lorraine.

The English army held that point of the line in the vicinity of Mons, in the first general battle. There was a Belgian garrison in Namur and some Belgian troops in the French line in that neighborhood.

The territory within the broken line at the left of the map, which takes in the River Somme and the cities of Abbeville, Peronne and Amiens, is the Department of Somme referred to in one of the French bulletins.

Costly Homes in 34-Mile Line Set for Demolition

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.

A CIRCLE of country 34 miles long will be swept of buildings, if the order of the military Governor of Paris that residents of the "zone of action" of the French capital's defending forts burn their homes, in anticipation of a siege is correctly interpreted here.

It is supposed the order refers to the suburban territory just beyond the city's second line of defenses, composed of 17 connecting forts.

These are located in a wide circle about two miles outside of the inner wall of Paris. They lie for the most part among famous suburban towns, such as Neuilly, Versailles and Vincennes, and sweep every approach to the city. It is assumed that the Governor's order is intended to clear the way in front of these defenses, that no protection will be afforded an advancing enemy.

The order probably applies also to the outer circles of the triple line of defenses. These are the most modern of the forts. They are built of steel and masonry, and are known to be equipped with the heaviest guns of the famous French artillery, although details as to their armament have been closely guarded. They are located among the hills, and, while it may be necessary to destroy numerous buildings to open the country to the fire of their guns, it is thought the destruction will not be of such wholesale proportions as in the case of the second line forts, which are imbedded among costly dwellings and thriving towns.

Something of the magnitude of the defenses of Paris is shown by estimates that only an army of half a million men could hope to invest them and cut them off from the outside world.

The outer lines are so placed that each fort has a cross-fire over the territory swept directly by the guns of adjoining forts. The result is to make attackers face fire from both flanks, as well as the front, in advancing on any position.

CRUISER FEARLESS LED IN HELGOLAND VICTORY

Drew German Ships Into Engagement in Which 11 of Them Are Said to Have Been Sunk—The Mainz Strewn With Dead.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—The honors in the British naval victory off Helgoland, in which at least 11 German vessels of various sizes are now said to have been sunk, will probably go to the officers and crew of the British light cruiser Fearless.

The Fearless is a vessel of 3300 tons, carrying 320 men. The crews of destroyers which have arrived in British ports say he Fearless began the battle, approaching within ten miles of the German coast and drawing out the German cruisers, which attempted to surround her.

At one moment she was engaged single-handed against four of them. One German steamer had come within 7000 yards of the Fearless when she was struck and burst into flames.

Afterward the Fearless stood by the disabled German, although she herself was in great danger of being sunk. The arrival of the other British cruisers speedily decided the engagement.

Fearless Hit 19 Times.

After they had found the range, the German marksmanship was good. The Fearless had her wireless shot away and was hit 19 times.

The British casualties thus far reported are one killed and 20 injured. Toward the end of the battle some English pinnaces (lifeboats), engaged in picking up Germans who were struggling in the water, were followed by the German squadron, and had to retreat hastily, leaving the men to their fate.

British cruisers and destroyers, some of them showing signs of the battle in which they were engaged off Helgoland, have arrived at Harwich, Chatham and Sheerness. They had British and German wounded aboard. The Germans were picked up at sea after their ships went to the bottom. A number of men died before the warships reached port, and were buried at sea; others died on the way to the hospital, and their bodies were taken to the naval mortuary.

Most of the wounded are suffering from head injuries caused by shall fire, but others had shattered arms and legs. White-clad bearers carried most of the wounded to the hospitals, but some of them were accommodated on yachts which had been lent for Red Cross service. No one was permitted to board the damaged vessels, but from shore it could be seen that some of them bore shell holes. One destroyer had no less than 14 such holes, which had been plugged with cloth.

Many Dead on Mainz.

British sailors who boarded the German cruiser Mainz after she was put out of action say the effect of the British gun fire was terrible. The masts were shot away and the turrets were battered in. The decks were a mass of wreckage and dead and dying sailors were lying all over the ship.

A Harwich message, censored, describing the landing of the wounded in the Helgoland fight, says there were plenty of eye-witnesses when the batch were landed shortly before 6 o'clock this morning. Among the dead was a lieutenant-commander. The German wounded from the Mainz were roughly attired; none had a full uniform. Many had suffered frightful wounds. The Mainz's quartermaster, who is more than 60 years old, was badly wounded.

Ninety German prisoners from the Mainz have been landed at Leith. Eight are officers, and one is said to be the son of Admiral von Tirpitz, German Minister of the Navy. Sixteen of the prisoners are suffering from wounds.

2000 WOMEN IN MOURNING MARCH AS WAR PROTEST

Silent Column Watched by Thousands on Fifth Avenue in New York.

By Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—With no sound breaking the stillness save the constant tap-tap of muffled drums carried by Boy Scouts and the steady shuffling of feet, upward of 2000 women marched down Fifth avenue from Fifty-ninth street to Union Square today as a protest against the war in Europe. They were all dressed in black or white with mourning bands on their sleeves.

With eyes fixed upon the marchers and the solemn faces that showed but little emotion, many thousands of men and women and children lined Fifth avenue three and four and even five deep, adding their protest to that of the women, making no sound, giving no sign of approval or disapproval, quietly looking on.

In no way was the display spectacular, though it was unusual in many respects. The demonstration had the approval of President Wilson.

The women marched steadily at a good pace. The watchers stood respectfully as they passed. No one cheered, no one applauded. Fifth avenue, usually thronged with vehicles and pedestrians, was almost as silent as a tomb.

The increasing cloudiness and general threatening aspect of the weather undoubtedly kept the number of women in line below what had been expected, but it did not diminish the crowds along the curbs. No count was made of the marchers, but the line averaging five abreast, extended about 12 blocks and estimates of the number in line varied between 1500 and 2000. The crowds at the curbs could not be estimated.

Leading the parade marched Miss Portia Willis, grand marshal, dressed all in white, with a straw hat, bordered with black.

Immediately behind the standard bearer came Mrs. Henry Villard, chairman of the Committee of Two Hundred, responsible for the parade. Mrs. Villard, daughter of the famous abolitionist, William Lloyd Garrison, walked alone, a gray-haired little woman.

There were many well-known women in the line, including Miss Mary Shaw, Mrs. Charlotte P. Gilman, Miss Rosalie Jones, Amelia Summerville and Miss Margaret Vale, President Wilson's niece, but the interest of the spectators did not seem to center in individuals, though here and there someone asked whether Mrs. Astor or Mrs. Belmont was in the line. Neither was present.

No Time for Tears, Says a Bereaved Crown Prince

BERLIN, via London, Aug. 30, 4:19 a. m.—The Bavarian Crown Prince Rupprecht, who is in command of one of the German armies, in announcing the death of his son, Prince Luitpold, to the King, concludes his telegram with the following words:

"Duty commands action, not tears, at the present time."

Prince Luitpold, who was 13 years old, died recently from inflammation of the throat.

French Lieutenant Killed Near Statue to Grandfather

PARIS, Aug. 29.—Among recent casualties reported was the death of Jean de Crepy, a Lieutenant of Hussars and the grandson of Gen. Chanzy, one of the heroes of the Franco-Prussian war of 1870.

Lieut. Crepy was killed in ambush very near the French town of Buzancy where his grandfather was buried and where a statue was raised by France to Gen Chanzy's memory.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—The American Embassy has been unable to communicate with some Americans marooned in Ghent, Belgium, who are in need of money.

News of the plight of these travelers reached London through the State Department at Washington, which received its information from the American Consul at Ghent, who succeeded in making his way to Antwerp.

The Embassy is unable to get into communication with either Antwerp or Ghent

FRENCH ATTACK TO CHECK FLANKING MOVE OF INVADERS

Every Available Man and Gun Being Gathered to Check German Advance on Road to Capital—English Army in Critical Situation—Antwerp Reports That Germans Are Rushing Troops to Meet Russians.

By ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS, Aug. 30 (Sunday), 12:57 a. m.—It is officially announced that the Military Governor has ordered all residents within the zone of action of the city's defending forts to evacuate and destroy their houses within four days from today, August 30.

The order marks the final preparation to resist siege, clearing the deck for action, as it were.

PARIS, Aug. 30, 12:59 a. m.—It is officially announced that the French left, composed of four army corps (about 150,000), drove back on Guise the Tenth German Corps and guard (about 40,000). The Germans suffered a considerable loss.

Further announcements made by the war office say:

"In Lorraine our forces have advanced. Our right wing is pushing forward.

"There is no news from the Meuse.

"A violent battle occurred yesterday (Saturday) in the region of Lannoy, near Lille, and at Signy l'Abbaye and Chateau Porcien, but the result has not been decisive and the attack will be resumed tomorrow.

"Four French army corps engaged in a violent battle on the left wing. The right wing of these four corps, taking the offensive, drove back on Guise the Tenth German Corps and the guard, both suffering considerable losses. Our left was less fortunate. The German forces are advancing in the direction of La Fere."

Germans Defeat British at St. Quentin

BERLIN, Aug. 29 (by wireless to the Associated Press).—No news was received here today concerning the situation on the French frontier, beyond a special dispatch to the Tages Zeitung declaring that the British defeat at St. Quentin was complete. The British losses were heavy and the routed British soldiers were forced to accept battle by the German cavalry, who were in masses on their line of retreat.

La Fere is a fortified town on the general line of defense the French are now trying to hold with their English support and is about 75 miles from Paris.

The town of Lannoy is seven miles northeast of Lille.

Guise is about midway between La Fere and Maubeuge on the French line as shown on the accompanying map. Signy L'Abbaye and Chateau Porcien are east by south of Guise.

The engagements at Lannoy, Guise and St. Quentin (reported by Berlin) show the extent of the German flanking movement against the French left, about which Paris and London bulletins have expressed concern.

St. Quentin is 50 miles south by west of Maubeuge, where the English were massed after their retreat from Mons.

It is evident that the fight near Lille was a French attack on the German flank movement, as Lille is far north of the allies' line. The Signy l'Abbaye-Chateau Porcien battle, far below Maubeuge, would indicate that the French line through that city had been penetrated.

The last preceding statement from the French War Office, issued Friday night said: "The situation on our front from the Department of Somme to the Vosges remains the same today as yesterday. The German forces appear to have slackened their march."

All early bulletins had placed the left of the line at Lille. The River Somme, the natural line of defense in the department of that name, being 50 miles south of Lille, the extent of the retreat of the northern army is seen.

Every Available Man and Gun Rushed to Oppose German Advance

LONDON, Aug. 29, 11:10 p. m.—The French and British are gathering every man and gun available in northwestern France in an attempt to stop the German advance on the road to Paris.

It is said that General Joffre, Commander in Chief of the French army, will endeavor to strike at the German right and bring relief to the British and French forces which have been placed in such a critical situation by the German outflanking movement.

How far the allies have succeeded in getting across the German path is not disclosed, for the outside world is ignorant tonight of what is happening on the battlefield.

A report comes both from [illegible] and Copenhagen that the Germans

FRENCH AND BRITISH LOST 76 MILES IN TEN DAYS FIGHT, SAYS EXPERT

Kaiser and Franz-Josef Send Decorations to One Another

LONDON, Aug. 29.

ACCORDING to Berlin official dispatches received by Marconi wireless, the Austrian Emperor, in a telegram to the Emperor of Germany, says:

"The splendid victories gained by the German armies under your command over your powerful enemies, are due to your iron will. You have sharpened and swung the mighty sword. To the laurels which adorn you as victor I should like to add the highest military honor in my power to confer, by asking you to accept the grand cross of Maria Theresa.

"Knowing how highly you and your army value the achievements of Gen. von Moltke, I bestow upon him the commander's cross of the Maria Theresa order."

The German Emperor has bestowed on the Austrian Emperor the order "Pour le Merite," and upon Gen. Baron Conrad Hotsendorf the iron cross of the first and second class.

have commenced a movement back from the west to meet the Russians, who have been advancing so quickly through east Prussia, but it is hardly likely that they will make any great demands upon the western army until the big battle in which there seems to have been a lull has been definitely decided.

English Not Cut Off.

Field Marshal Sir John French, the British commander, whose army has been so hard pressed, was in communication with the British war office late this afternoon, thus disproving the earlier German report that the British had been encircled by the Germans.

Today's reports from the German general staff are not more illuminating than merely to say that the Crown Prince's army which occupied Longwy is now advancing toward the Meuse; that a French advance from Nancy has been repulsed, and that a third army is advancing through the Vosges. This probably is the army which was said to be making Belfort its objective.

The Russians continue their march through East Prussia and confirmation comes tonight of the statement that they had succeeded in investing Koenigsberg and had taken Allenstein. It will be a long time, however, before they can directly threaten Berlin or, indeed, before their million of men can reach the scene on the Austrian frontier where troops of the Russian emperor are engaged in a general battle on a front of 300 kilometers (186 miles) between the Vistula and Lemberg, capital of Galicia.

Turkey's Attitude Causes Alarm.

There is considerable uneasiness over the attitude of Turkey. Athens tonight reports that German naval officers and sailors are on the way to Constantinople.

There has been strong denunciation of the continuance of football, cricket and other games while the British army is fighting and more men are required to reinforce them, and particularly of young men watching matches while Secretary for War Kitchener is calling for recruits.

Field Marshal Lord Roberts referred to this in a speech he made today to a new battalion of royal fusiliers recruited from the business and professional men of the city of London. He expressed his intense admiration for these men, saying:

"How different is your action to that of the men who can still go on with their cricket and football as if the very existence of the country were not at stake. This is not the time to play games, wholesome as they are in times of piping peace. We are engaged in a life and death struggle."

Crown Prince Again Advancing

LONDON, Aug. 29, 8:55 P. M.—An official Berlin dispatch by Marconi wireless says:

"The army led by Crown Prince Frederick William is advancing toward the Meuse.

"The troops under the Crown Prince of Bavaria were attacked from Nancy and the south, but the enemy was driven off.

"German marines, returning from Scutari, have joined the Austrian forces engaged against Servia and stormed in the first line a mountain 1000 meters high, on the banks of the Drina.

Paris Believes French Armies Better Off Than Last Sunday

PARIS, Aug. 29—6:40 p. m.—This has been a long and anxious day in Paris. When the War Office has nothing to issue, the pessimists show themselves and everybody asks what is going on in the north.

As far as can be learned, the French massed troops appear to be intact except for those losses which were inevitable in a week's heavy fighting over a vast front.

If the British and French retire on the western flank, it is explained that they do so to choose their ground for fiercer resistance. Every day has seen reinforcements moving up to aid the French troops engaged on the Belgium frontier.

The French operating along the interior lines are able to shift an army corps from one part of the front to another swiftly and it is stated the Allies probably are in sronger position today than last Sunday.

The Germans, apparently owing to the increasing pressure of Russia, seem to be throwing themselves against entrenched positions and are suffering very severely. They are gaining ground and seemingly are hopeful of being able to break through before Berlin is invested.

French wounded are arriving at the provincial towns. The Temps Versailles correspondents reports that wounded are passing through there today.

One German Army Corps Reported Hurrying Back to Meet Russians

LONDON, Aug. 29, 9:20 p. m.

One hundred and sixty railway trains loaded with German troops passed through Belgium from the southwest to the northeast last night, acording to an Antwerp dispatch to the Reuter Telegram company This, it is added, indicates that the Germans are sending troops back on account of the Russian advance. The German force at Brussels has been reduced to the minimum.

These 160 trains, the dispatch continues, are transporting one army corps with full equipment, and "it would appear that the rapid advance of the Russians is compelling the Germans to withdraw troops from the line of the Meuse."

An official announcement issued at Antwerp is sent from that city by the Reuter correspondent. It says:

"It is confirmed that numerous trains last Friday transported German troops from the Courtrai region in an easterly direction. The retirement of the German troops is increasing. The enemy has abandoned the country north of the line including Merchtem, Vilvorde, Aerschot, Huyst-op-den-Berg, Tremmelom and Haeght. The province of Antwerp and part of Limburg are free of the enemy. The general position is regarded with confidence."

Roberts Warns British Defeat Means Slavery

LONDON, Aug. 29.

FIELD MARSHAL LORD ROBERTS ("Bobs"), addressing a meeting tonight to obtain recruits for the army, declared that the country was in great danger. There was no use in mincing words, he said. Defeat would mean ruin, shame and slavery.

"Our soldiers are fighting bravely," said Lord Roberts, "but they are lamentably few, and it is the duty of every able-bodied man to see that the army is maintained at its full strength. The women must not stand in the light of their sons' and husbands' duty."

R. H. DAVIS, WAR CORRESPONDENT, HELD AS A SPY

LONDON, Aug. 29.—Richard Harding Davis, war correspondent of the Post-Dispatch, was arrested by German soldiers while following in the wake of the German army south of the Belgian capital, and for hours the Germans debated as to whether he should be shot as a spy, according to information brought to London today by James R. Evans, an American engineer.

Evans said that he talked with Davis after his release and return to Brussels, with difficulty, because of the close watch that was kept over the correspondent by the German soldiers.

He said:

"Evidently the order was given that Davis be shot. From what I learned from Davis, the Germans were determined to be guided in dealing with the war correspondent by the belief that he knew too much, but at the same time they were willing to listen to any plausible statement he had to make.

"Davis was held four days by the German officers, and when he returned to his hotel in Brussels declared he had had almost nothing to eat during that time."

Evans said the Germans had refused to give Davis a pass that would take him to England, fearing he would impart military information to the British. It is supposed that he was given a pass into Germany and is being detained at Aix-la-Chappelle.

Former French War Minister Joins General Army Staff

PARIS, Aug. 29.—Adolph Messimy, former French Minister of War, tomorrow will assume his post as a member of the general staff of the army.

PARIS THE WORLD'S MOST STRONGLY FORTIFIED CITY

Military Experts Say 170,000 Men Within Can Hold Off a Half-Million Besiegers—Three Rings of Defenses.

PARIS, which is preparing for possible siege, was described recently by a German military authority as the most strongly fortified city in the world. Paris is regarded as the objective point of the Kaiser's great army. The French place great reliance on the almost impregnable system of fortifications, comprised of three distinct rings of defences, so arranged that the principal forts can cross-fire without damage to each other.

It is declared by military experts that an army of 170,000 men within the fortifications could hold off a besieging army of 500,000 men. The two inner rings of defences consist of the enciente (principal fortification) and a circle of detached forts around it, while the outer works form an entrenched camp similar to the fortifications of Antwerp.

The inner group of fortifications was constructed before the Franco-Prussian war, and with few exceptions withstood the assaults of the Prussian army, which finally captured the city in 1871 after having starved out the French defenders.

Arrangement of Forts.

On the north side of the city, within the inner group, there are three forts around St. Denis, one being arranged to control an inundation. To the eastward there is the strong Fort Aubervilliers, commanding the approaches north of the wood of Bondy. On the south side of the city, scarcely more than a mile from the inner circle of fortifications, there is a row of forts—Ivy, Bicetre, Montrouge, Vanves and Issy.

On the west side of Paris stands the famous fortress of Mont Valerein, 535 feet above the sea level and 450 feet above the river, which flows through the city. It is strengthened by two groups of fortifications, which prevent access to the plateau that overlooks Paris.

Each of the forts in the chain of fortifications around the city is equipped with 24 to 60 powerful guns, mostly of the disappearing type. The guns from these forts could sweep the country for miles in every direction from Paris. There are from 600 to 1200 men stationed regularly at each fort, and each of the redoubts, batteries and annex-batteries is equipped with six guns and occupied by a force of 200 men.

The German attack most likely would be from the north. In the northern section of the Paris surroundings there is a horseshoe-shaped ridge, which is heavily fortified to command the lower Seine, the Argenteuil peninsula and the lower grounds toward the River Oise. At an average distance of five meters from St. Denis are the fortifications of the Montlignon-Domont position, which sweep all the grounds to the north, and cross their fire with the Cormeilles works. And protect the plateau of Montmorency-Mery-sur-Oise. At Ecoeun, on a high hill, are a fort and redoubt, and not far away are Fort Stains and several batteries.

The Vaujours fortress, in the eastern section, commands the countryside to the north as far as Dammartin and Claye, and crosses its fire with Stains on one side and Villiers on the other. The Vaujours works are armored. Three miles from this fortification is Fort Chelles, which bars the roads and railways of the Marne Valley.

Versailles Fortified.

Forts Villiers and Champigny are on the other side of the Marne valley, and near them are Fort Boissy-St. Leger, and the armored works of Villeneuve-St. Georges, which command the Seine and the Yeres country for many miles. In the southwestern section are the powerful Fort Palaiseau and its annexes, commanding the Yvette valley. And behind Fort Palliseau, and midway between it and Fort Chatillon, is another group of forts overlooking the valley of the Bievre. There are other forts on the high ground toward Versailles, and that city itself is surrounded by a semi-circle of batteries.

The fortifications have been laid out by the shrewdest military engineers of France, and so arranged as to sweep an enemy from every section of the country surrounding the city.

Paris Papers May Print but One Edition

PARIS, Aug. 29.

THE newspapers are forbidden to publish more than one edition in every 24 hours. Failure to observe the order, which was issued by Celestine Hennion, Prefect of Police, and approved by Gen. Gallieni, Military Governor of Paris, will result in the suspension of the newspapers concerned and in the total suppression of a paper in case of a second attempt.

English and French Censors Busy Censoring Each Other

PARIS, Aug. 29.—The English and French censors appear to be as busy on news passed by one or the other of the allies' official news bureaus as on the dispatches of the newspaper correspondents.

The British censors stop parts of official communications issued by the War Office in Paris and the French censors appear to have delayed on two or three occasions announcement made in the House of Commons regarding the situation of the armies. The French censorship, however, seems less severe than that in England on news originating in France.

Bulletins Given Out by Embassy Attache Claim Victory at Allenstein.

ARE NEAR KOENIGSBERG

Advance Post of Garrison Driven In, and River Alle Bridges Taken.

By Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—Col. Nikolai Golejewski, military attache of the Russian Embassy at Washington, made public here tonight cable messages from the Russian foreign office in St. Petersburg, regarding Russian war operations. The messages were as follows:

"The Russian troops are approaching the fortresses of Koenigsberg, driving in the advance post of the garrison. Reports have come in to headquarters that the Russian troops have taken possession of the bridges on the river Alle.

"On the Galiciana border, a battle near Tomashoff and Monestyskaia has been begun successfully. Further to the east, our troops are energetically closing in on Lwow (Lemberg) of which town our advance troops are already within reach. Our cavalry is actively clearing up the country in front of the advance of our columns.

Artillery Captured.

"Aug. 25 (Tuesday) our cavalry, having overtaken an Austrian cavalry division to the west of Tchertkoff, forced the latter to fight, dispersed it and took a battery of horse artillery.

"On the Eastern Prussian front, Aug. 25, 26 and 27, a battle was continued near Saldau-Allenstein-Bischofsburg, where the enemy has concentrated the army corps which retreated from Gumbinnen reinforced by fresh troops.

"Allenstein has been taken by our troops. (Note: The Germans have issued a bulletin claiming a victory near Allenstein.) The Germans suffered especially heavy losses in Muhlen, between Osterode and Marienburg, where they are in full retreat. In the vicinity of Petrokoff our cavalry defeated three German squadrons, reinforced by a company of cyclists. Of the latter 127 were taken prisoners.

Big Battle in Galicia.

"In Galicia, Aug. 26, a series of separate engagements assumed the character of a great battle, which was developing in the southern districts of the provinces of Lubin and Holm and in Eastern Galicia, on the road to Lwow, over a general front of 200 miles.

"At first the battle had the character of a bataille du recontre (pitched battle), but later on many parts of the Austrian line were forced to take a defensive position. One of our infantry regiments, in a hand-to-hand fight, took the colors of and almost completely annihilated the Eleventh Gonwed (Hungarian) regiment. An energetic advance is being continued.

"During the night of August 25, the German light cruiser Magdeburg ran ashore near the entrance to the Bay of Finland. On the morning of Aug. 26 the Russian cruiser Pallada and Bogatyr, with torpedo boats, drew near and opened fire. An explosion followed on the German cruiser, which tore amidships. The Russian warships took off the captain, two officers and 154 sailors; the rest of the crew apparently made their escape during the night on the torpedo boats which accompanied the cruiser."

Koenigsberg, Strongly Fortified, Has 200,000 Population.

Koenigsberg is a strongly fortified seaport of Prussia and the capital of the province of East Prussia. It consists of three parts, the Alstadt, the Kneiphof (on an island) and Loebenicht. It contains many noteworthy structures. The industrial establishments include locomotive works, iron foundries and flour mills. The population is about 200,000. The distance from Koenigsberg to Berlin is 388 miles.

German Survivors of Naval Battle Taken to St. Petersburg.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—A dispatch to the Reuter Telegram Co. from St. Petersburg says that six officers of the German light cruiser Magdeburg and 56 sailors, who survived the destruction of the ship by the Russian fleet, arrived at the Russian capital today.

The German officers traversed the city in automobiles, guarded by Russian sailors with fixed bayonets. The bluejackets were marched through the city.

Oscar Straus Predicts Downfall of Monarchies

(Copyright, 1914, by Press Pub. Co.)

LONDON, Aug. 29.—"When this war is over I do not believe there will be a single monarchy left in Europe," was the assertion of Oscar Straus of New York, a former Cabinet officer and American diplomat. He has been in Europe all summer.

"If the Germans enter Paris it will be only the beginning of this war," he added. "The English intend seeing this thing through, and I believe the Russian promises will be kept, but I don't believe after the war there will be a single monarchy left in Europe, for this isn't a war of the people, but of governments. America must remain neutral and will, as it is the only power left which can use good offices for mediation."

54 Persons Reported Lost When Mine Wrecks Steamer

LONDON, Aug. 29.—A dispatch to Lloyds from Nikolayev, Russia, says the small passenger steamer Express, from Odessa for Nikolayev, struck a mine Aug. 11 and was destroyed.

Fifty-four persons perished, but most of the passengers and crew were picked up by other steamers.

Expert Believes New Franco-British Line Stronger Than First

(Reprinted From Yesterday's Post-Dispatch.)

SCANT as have been the official outgivings in recent days, and all others have been worthless, the German official statement of yesterday and the French War Office communique of last night, viewed in the light of the other fragments that have come to us, suffice to reconstruct a part at least of the terrific struggle of the past 10 days and the present posture of the combatants.

To summarize the history briefly—with full recognition of the hazard of the undertaking, so much must be pure speculation—10 days ago, when the Germans, having occupied Brussels, wheeled left for France, the situation was about as follows:

On that great battle line from the English Channel to Switzerland, so familiar in current news dispatches, one French army was standing before the Northern frontier from Lille to Charleroi in Belgium, with its center about Mons held by British soldiers and its right flank along the Meuse below Namur.

Allies' Rear Threatened.

A second army filled the gap between the first and the frontier barrier of Verdun-Epinal, and a third was fighting before Nancy on the Lorraine and Alsace borders.

Coming south, the great German army, that of the Meuse, struck the northern army of the French and English at Charleroi and Mons and took Namur to the north of it. While this phase was going on, half of the German army of the Moselle, east of the Meuse and moving due west, struck the right flank of the French northern army along the Meuse, broke it up and pursued it across the Meuse. When it had achieved this success, it was on the flank and rear of the French and English fighting from Mons to Charleroi and threatened to interpose between them and Paris. It became necessary for the allies to retreat and they did rapidly, the French coming south, east of Maubeuge, the English west.

Race for Road to Paris.

It was a race between the German army of the Moselle, commanded by Grand Duke Albrecht, and the French to get control of the road to Paris. As the English retired, they left the cover of the Maubeuge-Lille line of forts and their left wing, which was also the left wing of the whole army, was exposed. On this flank, then, the Germans, evidently waiting for this event, flung five army corps, from 225,000 to 315,000 men, in one tremendous rush.

Then, at one stage and the critical stage of operation, the allies were in this position, on the right flank and to the rear was the army of the Moselle moving toward their line of retreat. In the front was the main German army, commanded by Generals von Hausen and Von Buelow, on the left flank and striking toward their rear were five corps, commanded by Gen. von Kluk.

Shadow of a Sedan.

In other words, they were in great peril of being surrounded by two flanking forces striking on the flank and rear while faced with a superior force at the North.

Here, then, was the immediate shadow of a Sedan, far more gigantic than that of 1870, which might in a single operation dispose of some 600,000 and thus permit the victorious army moving south and east to interpose between Paris and the French armies on the Vosges and in Alsace and drive them north and eastward against the Bavarian-Austrian troops about Metz and Strassburg.

Such, briefly, was the tremendous enveloping movement of the German strategists, a magnificent expansion of the elder Von Moltke's plan which shut one French army up in Metz and another in Sedan in 1870. The purpose was disclosed in the official German statement; success was claimed for it by the German Ambassador last night.

This morning, however, there is plain reason for believing that the allied forces have managed to escape the enveloping net.

The reason is found in the official French statement: "The situation on our front from the department of the Somme to the Vosges remains the same as yesterday." But "yesterday," so far as the world knew, the allies stood at Cambrai with one flank stretching toward Arras, the other toward Lacateau, the first town in the department of Pas de Calias, the other in the Aisne. In that position both flanks were open to attack and the peril of the enveloping movement remained.

But, if the allied forces are in the Somme, then, in fact, they are back squarely on the second line of defense of the French frontier, are occupying the region south of the Somme River, which military writers have frequently described and their right flank has come back full upon La Fere, the westernmost of the Laon-La Fere-Rheims barrier forts, so frequently mentioned recently—the left stretches to the channel along the narrow deep sunk valley of the Somme—and approximately their position on the map is disclosed by a line from Abbeville, through Ameins, Peronne, formerly a fortress, and St. Quentin to La Ferre.

Allies' Position Stronger.

Behind them is the road to Paris, on their rear also is Dieppe, become the base for the English troops.

So far as it is possible to discern now, the allies all stand some 76 miles south of the first battle field. This distance they have been driven fighting in the last 10 days. Their position now is a very strong one, far stronger than the first, and the smaller front to defend enables the allies to meet the German masses with a line that is no longer "thin" to the point of breaking.

This second line will have to be forced like the first. There is less chance for enveloping and more probability of frontal attack. The advantage to the defenders, therefore, is plain. They are also near their base, while the Germans have now at least 150 miles of hostile country between them and their base. Re-enforcements, too, the allies must be receiving from England and from the East, where the ill-advised counter-offensive operation has been abandoned and the French troops recalled.

Allied Army Still Secure.

As it looks at the moment, then, while the Germans have been successful in a number of tremendous conflicts and have rolled the French flanks up and threatened to surround them, they have failed to destroy the main allied army, which has returned to a strong position, in which they have the aid of entrenchments, always with the reservations that the French official statement be correct.

So far, and so far only, the Germans have temporarily failed. For Americans the very best parallel for present operations is that supplied by Grant's campaign from the Wilderness to Petersburg in 1864. His purpose and his spirit of relentless determination were identically those the Germans now display. Their disregard of the "butcher's bill" was his. The only difference is, he had no Russian peril far off to the east to divert him in time. And yet the Allies at least will derive slight comfort from the recollection that Grant failed in the particular campaign because, after 30 days of slaughter, even his veterans murmured and a whole nation protested.

Possibility of a Rout.

On the other hand, there remains the possibility that the Germans have succeeded in their enveloping movement and the still more likely chance that the retreat of the allies has been turned into a rout, that they will be unable to stand at the Somme and will be swept back upon Paris, or separated, the French retreating east, the British west.

Such a suggestion is found in the report from German sources that a British force at St. Quentin has been completely defeated. Next to being caught in an enveloping movement, the dispersal of the allied armies, with the prospect of their ultimate destruction in detail, is the gravest disaster conceivable. German dispatches suggest the latter is probable. In any case, the next stand of the allies after the Somme must be before the forts of Paris.

"Well, I see the paper reports a complete rout," said Jiggs.

"Yes, but they certainly are putting up a game fight," replied Riggs.

"The scrap's not over by any means."

"A little better g e n e r a l ship that's all that's needed."

"They're playing the game all right. Just got the bad breaks, that's all."

"Yes, but it's pretty tough. They haven't won a battle in two weeks."

"What are you talking about? Didn't they clean up all along the line until they struck this Boston bunch?"

"I can't get that connection. The papers don't say anything about Boston. It's all about the allies falling away before the Germans."

"That's not on my sport page. There isn't anything here except those two games the Cards lost yesterday."

Official forecast for St. Louis and vicinity—Fair and warmer today; Monday fair.

ARTILLERY DROVE NAMUR DEFENDERS FROM FORTRESSES

LONDON, Aug. 29.—Lieut. Deppe of the Belgian infantry, who was in command of the cyclist section at Namur, in a report to the official bureau, says the fortress of Namur was completely evacuated by the Belgians at 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon, Aug. 23.

Lieut. Deppe says that when he left Namur the Germans had knocked to pieces three of the forts northeast of the town with howitzer fire. Between these forts they advanced and bombarded the town, which was defended by the Belgian fourth division. Namur was evacuated when the defenders found themselves unable to support a heavy artillery fire.

The Germans attacked in a formation three ranks deep, the front rank lying down, the second kneeling and the third standing. They afforded a taregt which was fully used by the men behind the Belgian machine guns. Some fifty or sixty howitzers were brought into action by Germans, who concentrated several guns simultaneously on each fort and smothered it with fire.

GERMANY DEFENDS HER ARMY'S ACTION IN DESTROYING CITY OF LOUVAIN

LOUVAIN PEOPLE FIRED ON TROOPS, GERMANS CHARGE

Berlin War Office Declares Burning of Historic Belgian City Was Due to Conduct of Its Inhabitants Toward Troops Apparently Retreating.

CIVIL OFFICIALS HELD RESPONSIBLE

Priests Placed Arms in Hands of People, Statement Declares, and Fight With Soldiers in Streets Continued 24 Hours.

By Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—A defense of the German destruction of the historic Belgian town of Louvain was contained in a wireless dispatch from the Berlin Foreign Office to the German Embassy here today. The message says:

"In consequence of a sudden attack of Belgian troops from Antwerp, the German garrison at Louvain went out to meet the enemy, leaving only one battalion of the last reserves and an army service corps.

"Thinking this was a retreat of the German troops, priests of Louvain gave the people ammunition and civilians began to shoot at unsuspecting German troops from windows in different parts of the town, and wounded many. A fight lasting 24 hours took place between the German soldiers and the people of the town. Parts of the city are burning and civilians met carrying arms are killed.

"A manifesto of the Chief of the General Staff speaks of bestial cruelty on the wounded, and makes the civil authorities of the town responsible for the provocation and for providing the people with arms.

"The leaders of the German army," the dispatch continues, "protest against news spread by enemies about the cruelty of German warfare. German troops sometimes had to take severe measures when provoked by the people making treacherous attacks upon them or committing atrocities against the wounded. The responsibility for the method of warfare falls entirely upon the civil authorities of occupied territory, who give arms to civilians and stir them up to take part in the war. The German troops never harmed people or private property without cause. The German soldier is no incendiary or pillager, but fights only against the army of the enemy. The news published in foreign papers about German soldiers persecuting noncombatants are mean lies showing lack of morality on the part of the author."

REFUGEE LEFT AS CITY WAS IN FLAMES

Citizen of Louvain Says Men and Women Were Parted at Railway Station.

By Associated Press.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 29 (By way of London, 7:40 p. m.).—The correspondent at Rosendaal of the Hendelsblad interviewed a fugitive from Louvain, who gave his experience in that city.

"Monday evening," he said, "gun firing suddenly resounded in the streets. I did not know the meaning of it, but some declare the German troops had fired upon each other. The Germans, however, insisted that the shots had been fired by the inhabitants, and that several soldiers had been killed.

"Throughout the night heavy field guns bombarded the town, destroying many houses. We sought shelter in a cellar and at daybreak prepared for flight. We hastily packed our valuables and hurried to the railway station. There the refugees were parted, the men being placed on one side and women and children on the other side of the station square. Near the statue of Gen. Van de Weyer, which stands in front of the station, we could see the bodies of six burghers who had been shot.

"The town was now one flaming mass. At last, escorted by German soldiers, we walked to Campenhout, where we witnessed the shooting of seven priests in a group.

"Our party of 73 men were handcuffed like criminals and locked in a church, with only the cold floor to lie upon. Additional prisoners arrived at intervals. Outside the cries and lamentations of women and children arose. Within the church an imprisoned priest gave absolution.

"When we left the building Campenhout was burning fiercely. We were told that we would be set free, but must return to Louvain. Returning to that city, I was once more taken prisoner and driven in front of German soldiers across the country without rest or food, and used with other prisoners as a cover for the troops.

"When we arrived within a short distance of the Belgian outposts, I received permission to go on my way. I arrived at Malines, proceeding on a military train to Antwerp. I am unaware of what has become of my wife and children. All my valuables were taken from me."

British Press Bureau Calls Report of Allies Being Divided a "Stupid Invention" of Germans

After receipt on Friday of the official war reports from Berlin headquarters by wireless to the Associated Press, via Sayville, L. I., the Post-Dispatch and New York World cabled the war office in London as follows:

"Official wireless from Berlin to Sayville, L. I., reports Allies in full retreat after nine days' fighting. English defeated at Maubeuge, French and English divided and surrounded. This news being displayed heavily. Does British war office wish to comment?" This reply came today:

To the Editors of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and New York World:

The nature of our position in the vicinity of Charleroi and the concentration of the enemy caused strategical retirement of allies after several days of heavy fighting, in which the enemy suffered severely.

Report that the Allies are divided and surrounded is a stupid invention wholly void of truth. PRESS BUREAU WAR OFFICE.

Francis Joseph Is Well; Talks With Diplomats

VIENNA, via Rome and Paris, Aug. 29.

IT is learned from a reliable source that the health of Emperor Francis Joseph is perfectly satisfactory and that he has been quite well since the war began. Yesterday he gave a protracted audience to the Foreign Minister, Count Leopold von Berchtold, and also received Count Forgach de Ghymes, formerly Minister to Servia, and Count A. Mensdorff-Pouilly-Dietrichstein. He also exchanged telegrams with Emperor William.

The aged monarch rises at his usual hour, and works all day.

King George's Second Son on Hospital Ship

ABERDEEN, Scotland, Aug. 29.

THE hospital ship Rotulla today landed 40 sick from the British fleet. The invalids included Prince Albert, second son of King George, who was taken to a nursing home.

It was reported several days ago that Prince Albert was suffering from an attack of appendicitis and had been landed at a port in Scotland, where it was said his condition caused no great anxiety. Prince Albert was attached to the battleship Collingwood.

HOUSE PASSES WAR RISK BILL; SENATE TO ACCEPT CHANGES

Two Amendments to Measure Expected to Be Ratified by Higher Body.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—The administration bill to create a Federal Bureau of war risk marine insurance, with a $5,000,000 fund to meet possible losses to American shipping was passed late today in the House by a vote of 230 to 58.

The House made two amendments to the measure as it passed the Senate. One limits the operation of the Government war risk insurance bureau to two years, the President having power to suspend it any time within that period. The other, reduced the salary of the chief of the bureau from $6000 a year to $5000. The Senate is expected to acquiesce and the bill will probably be ready for the President's signature when he returns to Washington next week from Cornish, N. H.

The bill establishes for the first time in American history a Federal marine insurance, though it is restricted to risks of war and especially applicable to the European emergency. It insures American vessels, their freight and passenger moneys and cargoes "whenever it shall appear to the Secretary of the Treasury that American vessels, shippers or importers in American vessels are unable in any trade to secure adequate war risk insurance on reasonable terms."

It is intended as supplementary to war risk insurance furnished by private concerns who claim they have not enough capital to give complete war risk insurance. The President is authorized to end Federal insurance and abolish the bureau whenever he finds the necessity has ceased.

Representative Mann, minority leader, took exception in the debate to the charge made by Representative Underwood yesterday that the Republicans were "un-American" in their opposition to the bill. He declared the majority leader had resorted to "nonsense and silliness" in making the statement. Underwood reiterated the statement asserting that Representative Mann's argument against the bill was "mere clap-trap."

The Republicans offered numerous amendments which the Democrats consistently voted down.

All Balkan States Prepare for Eventualities.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—The Daily Mail correspondent at Rome cables:

REFUGEES REACH HOME ON ARMED BRITISH LINERS

Adriatic and Olympic Dock at New York With 3534 Passengers From War Zone.

By Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—Painted in war gray, with four 6-inch, 20-foot guns, two aft and two forward, showing on her open deck, the armed merchantman Adriatic, the first regular passenger liner to arrive here with mounted guns, warped into her dock at West Seventeenth street today with 477 passengers in her first cabin, 645 in the second, and 645 in the steerage, a total of 1762.

Later, the big White Star liner Olympic came up the bay with 1772 passengers, 810 in the first cabin, 556 in the second and 406 in the steerage.

Fearing capture or attack by German warships, the Olympic was escorted to the high seas by the Aquitania, erstwhile premier liner of the Cunard company, but now an armed patrol of the British naval reserve. Off Fire Island the liner was met by the cruiser Essex, which convoyed her to the neutral waters of this harbor.

Most of the passengers on both the liners are American refugees from the European war zone.

Whether or not the Adriatic's armament brings her within the classification of an auxiliary cruiser, and, as such, places her under the regulations interning war vessels of a nation at war, is a question. Collector Malone asked Secretary of the Treasury what should be done.

The local customs authorities hold that the Adriatic must leave port within 24 hours or remain here until the close of the war, if the presence of the guns on board puts her in the auxiliary cruiser class. On the other hand, it was pointed out that the British steamship Francisco, carrying two guns on her stern, was permitted to sail a few days ago. In the Francisco's case it was claimed the guns comprised merely a saluting battery and were placed on board several months ago, and that at best they were only practicable for use as a measure of defense.

White Star officials contend that the Adriatic is not subject to regulations governing warships, and that they have already received a ruling from Washington in their favor.

The case is covered, the line officials claim, by rules adopted at the London international convention in 1909, which sanctioned carrying light armament for defense in times of peace or war.

LAUMEIER HEARD FROM

St. Louisan Arrested in Germany Reassures Friends.

Friends of H. H. Laumeier, real estate man and secretary of the St. Louis Federal League baseball team, who had been worried because they had received no news as to his exact whereabouts in Europe, were relieved yesterday by the receipt of a letter from him from Altenbruch, Germany. Laumeier, his mother, Mrs. Christine Laumeier, his brother-in-law and sister, a Mr. and Mrs. Gemp, and their three children went abroad two months ago.

The letter, which was addressed to J. H. Wise, 820 Victoria Building, was dated Aug. 1, and stated the trains were crowded with soldiers and Laumeier had been unable to get to another city where his mother was. Once he went to Cuxhaven, a neighboring town, and was arrested as a spy. He identified himself and was permitted to return to Altenbruch, with orders not to revisit Cuxhaven.

"It certainly is hell to be tied up here," he wrote.

Swiss Hear Italy Prepares to Aid the Allies.

GENEVA, Switzerland, Sunday, Aug. 23, via Paris, Aug. 29, 1:35 p. m., delayed in transmission.—There is much talk on the Swiss side of the Italian border of Italy's reported preparation to join with England and France against Germany and Austria. Italians in Switzerland have been called to the colors and it is reported here that the Italian fleet has been concentrated at a certain port on the Adriatic in preparation to join the British and the French squadrons before Trieste.

ITALY PREPARING TO FIGHT AUSTRIA; 800,000 MEN READY

French Frontier Vacated, Venetia Full of Soldiers, Says Swiss Paper.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch and New York World.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—The Standard's correspondent telegraphs from Geneva, under date of Aug. 25:

"Several Swiss papers publish telegrams from Rome, Milan and Turin from their correspondents, stating that Italy is arming to join the Triple Entente and to attack Austria. I give textually the telegrams received today by the Gazette de Lausanne, one of the most serious Swiss papers, from Novara:

"'Troops are passing incessantly, coming from Liguria and Piedmont, their destination being Udine, on the Austrian frontier. The French frontier has been entirely vacated.

"'Italian soldiers are full of strength and joy to "Chasser l'Austrichien" (hunt the Austrian).

"'In Venetia and on the frontier there are 800,000 men.

"'Within the next eight days the Italian army will enter the field.

"It should be added that, since the Anglo-French fleet entered the Adriatic, the effect on the Italian people has been so great that it may force the hands of the King and the Government, even if they wish to remain neutral, to take decisive measures.

AUSTRIA AGREES TO DISMANTLE HER FAR-EAST CRUISER

Kaiserin Elizabeth to Have Guns Removed—German Fleet Bottled Up.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—Official advices today established the fact that the Austrian cruiser Kaiserin Elizabeth had been dismantled last Monday, in accordance with an agreement reached between Austria and Japan. Orders countermanding orders from the Emperor of Austria reached the officers of the ship too late. The presence of the cruiser in Far Eastern waters was regarded as the only possible cause of friction between Japan and Austria. The latter, however, decided later to sever diplomatic relations. Austria's positon, it is understood was taken merely in sympathy with her ally, Germany, against whom Japan had declared war.

All German Far East Fleet Is in Tsingtau Harbor.

PEKIN, Aug. 29.—It is understood that the Chinese Government will decline Japan's offer to suppress any disorders that may occur in China during the European conflict. The Government, it is said, believes itself capable of putting down any purely internal uprising.

The cable between Shanghai and Tsingtau has been cut.

It is stated that the entire German Far-Eastern fleet is inside the harbor at Tsingtau and that the Germans are placing floating mines outside the harbor entrance.

Word is received from Tokio that the censor there refuses to divulge what messages are cabled and what are suppressed.

MEMBER OF KING'S PRIVY COUNCIL TELLS "WHY ENGLAND IS AT WAR"

BRITON CHARGES GERMANY PLOTTED "WORLD MURDER"

F. E. Smith, Member of Parliament, Replies to Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg's "Appeal for American Sympathy," Arraigns German Policy.

CALLS OFFER TO ENGLAND STUPID

Proposal for British Neutrality, While Planning Seizure of French Colonies and Violation of Belgium, "Unbelievable."

Frederick E. Smith, Member of Parliament from Liverpool and member of the King's Privy Council, has written an article entitled "Why England Is at War." This article was sent to the Post-Dispatch by Percy Sutherland Bullen, American representative of the London Daily Telegraph, with the request that it be printed, as a reply to what he terms the appeal for American sympathy made by Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg, German Imperial Chancellor, in a statement recently printed in the Post-Dispatch. The Post-Dispatch herewith prints the Smith article.

By the RIGHT HON. F. E. SMITH, K. C., M. P.

DETECTIVES and lawyers, whose duty it is to investigate mysterious crimes, seek those clews which explain most of the facts. The mysteries (and they are many) which surround Germany's colossal attempt at world murder, will, I believe, all be explained by the simple fact that in a nation of many idealists national policy has for some time past been directed by the idealists of brute force, who have used (and used badly) all the more humane elements in the country to mask their repulsive purpose. The merits (such as there are) and defects of German policy are those of brute force. Nothing but brute force could combine both the merits and the defects. The defense of Europe is indeed a defense of national and international morality, of humane practice, and of most of the generous sentiments of mankind, against the tyranny of relentless might.

I will give a few illustrations of the way this explanation fits the facts. The process did not begin with the present crisis. In 1905 France, caught in a moment of unpreparedness, was forced to shed a great foreign minister by a virtual threat of war from Germany. A year or two later Russia was forced to acquiesce in the Balkan policy of Austria because Germany stood by her ally (in the Emperor's own words) "in shining armor." At Agadir it was a German warship that gave point to German diplomacy. The publicists of the world during this period found little of finesse or subtlety even in the aggressions of Germany, little of the patient endeavor to secure by adroit diplomacy the fruits of victory. As diplomatists her statesmen blundered, though as exponents of force they for the time reaped some successes. The real authors of real German policy were, then as now, the men who saw force in their waking and dreaming moments alike, who lived on it, and who, I doubt not, to do them justice, are ready to die in its name.

I have spoken indeed of the merits of German policy. The grim resolve which, at vast sacrifice of effort and treasure, has built up in a few years a gigantic war fleet and maintained for three generations a still more gigantic army, the imperious logic which bids fair at the moment to leave scarce a civilized country in the world without an ultimatum, the desperate valor, which, even as I write, is drenching the slopes of the forts of Liege with the best blood of Germany—these are elements in the rule of force one may admire, though the negation of right and justice which the total result involves soon turns admiration into disgust.

Miscalculated With Britain.

One of the defects, perhaps the most illuminating (though morally not the most serious), is the stupidity, surely the characteristic weakness of violent crime. The amazing miscalculations which the diplomacy and policy of the German Government display throughout the official record just published by the British Foreign Office are paralleled only by the crass absurdity of its attempt to deceive, to cajole, or to bribe the British Government into neutrality.

On July 25, 1914, the British Ambassador in Vienna reported home the "confident belief" of the German Ambassador there that "Russia will keep quiet during chastisement of Servia." Warned by his English colleague that "the Russian Government might be compelled by public opinion to intervene on behalf of kindred nationality," he contemptuously brushed aside the suggestion.

"The days of Pan-Slav agitation," he said, "were over and Moscow was perfectly quiet." That England, with an Irish crisis on her hands and a profound love of peace, would never draw the sword, even in a most righteous cause, was a political miscalculation of the same kind.

That Germany wanted to be free from English naval opposition is self-evident. The means she thought would be successful in securing our neutrality are unbelievable.

"Insane and Infamous."

On the 29th of July, 1914, the German Chancellor solemnly assured the British Ambassador at Berlin that he accepted the principle of British policy towards France, which he stated to be that Great Britain would never stand by and allow France to be crushed, and equally solemnly sought to secure British acquiescence in the crushing of France by a promise that no part of France, when conquered, should be annexed to Germany, but that all her colonies might be. As insane an offer for Germany to make as it would have been, in Mr. Asquith's phrase, an infamous bargain for England to entertain.

And English credulity was no less taxed by the bargain we were offered in respect to Belgium. We were to pay, money down, in the good coin of British neutrality—our fleets kept in harbor, our army in its barracks—while Germany overran Belgium with her troops, and get in return a promise that in the hour of victory Belgium would be evacuated by Germany, whose entry into it would itself be a violation of a previous promise made to the whole of Europe.

These things show that Germany has kept but one-half of Bismarck's policy. They have remembered to the full his stern belief in blood and iron. They have lost entirely the keen insight into the motives of foreign governments and peoples, and the careful resources by which he conciliated unnecessary opponents, or encouraged reluctant friends. We may be sure he would have forseen the resistance of Belgium and averted the neutrality of Italy, that his offers to England, if not more successful, would at least have been less fatuous.

Belgium Gives Proof.

The treatment of Belgium provides the main proof of the dishonesty and injustice of the ideal of force. The ruthless columns of Prusia are today trampling on the soil of Belgium in defiance of the plighted honor of their nation. If the guarantee which Prussia gave the Belgian integrity and neutrality in 1839, and reiterated in 1870, can be thus set aside to suit the military plans of her generals in their campaign against France, there is an end of any rule of righteousness among nations. We shall have delivered ourselves undisguised to the rule of fraudulent might.

A nation which violates thus its pledged word, at the bidding of a military caste, is not likely to heed the suggestions of human sentiment. In unswerving pursuit of the object of force mines are being laid by German ships in the open waters off a great neutral port. The sinking of one British warship is, in German eyes, a gain worth any peril to the merchantmen and passenger boats of Europe and America. Let peaceful citizens of the United States go to the bottom if only some few of Germany's foes may precede or follow them.

The whole policy of the present German war on European civilization shows that the learning, the culture and the humanity of the German people have abdicated in favor of the iron ideals of a group of Prussian generals, nurturing amid ignorance of all other elements in our common nature a blind belief in the omnipotence of organized might.

Planned to Subdue Europe.

There is no space here for a review of the course of diplomacy and, indeed, the spirit with which in the last stage Germany tossed about ultimatums suggests that, whatever the diplomatic course, she meant ultimately to impose upon the rest of Europe war or surrender. But that peace could for the time have been preserved, notwithstanding the genuine Balkan difficulty between Austria and Russia, if only Germany had really exerted herself with her ally in Vienna can hardly be doubted. Our Ambassador in Vienna more than once reported the militant bias of his German colleagues. "Unfortunately the German Ambassador is himself so identified with extreme anti-Servian feeling prevalent in Vienna that he is unlikely to plead the cause of peace with entire sincerity" (30th July). And again a few days later we are told by the same authority that there is "even greater tension between Germany and Russia than there is between Austria and Russia" and that "the German Ambassador at Vienna desired war from the first and that his strong personal bias probably colored his action here." (1st August). The final rupture thus came not from Austria and Russia (who had a quarrel) but from Germany, who had none.

England, as the published record shows, strove earnestly for peace. Now that she has been reluctantly drawn into war, the essential rightness of her cause has been demonstrated not less by the policy of her enemies than by the speeches and dispatches of her statesmen. Other nations in other wars have had to seek a casus belli. Germany had forced upon us a righteous issue. We fight in the first instance to preserve the independence of a small free kingdom guaranteed by our pledged word, and menaced by Germany in defiance of hers and for her own cynical objects of war.

Quotes Chancellor.

That this last sentence is no exaggeration is borne out by the speech of the German Imperial Chancellor in the Reichstag, on the fourth of August, when he said:

> Gentlemen, we are now in a state of necessity, and necessity knows no law! Our troops have occupied Luxemburg, and perhaps (as a matter of fact, the speaker knew that Belgium had been invaded that morning) are already on Belgian soil. Gentlemen, that is contrary to the dictates of international law. It is true that the French Government has declared at Brussels that France is willing to respect the neutrality of Belgium as long as her opponent respects it. We know, however, that France stood ready for the invasion. France could wait, but we could not wait. A French movement upon our flank upon the lower Rhine might have been disastrous. So we were compelled to override the just protest of the Luxemburg and Belgian Governments. The wrong—I speak openly—that we are committing we will endeavor to make good as soon as our military goal has been reached.

We fight, next, to save France from what is now revealed as a plain attempt to destroy her as a great power. We fight lastly to avert a situation in which Germany, as the arbiter by might of Europe, would have necessarily forced England to the servile dependence upon her as the rest of Europe. If German policy in this war succeeds, then for another 50 years we may bid good-by to any attempt to regulate international regulations upon the principles of either domestic independence or international morality.

London Papers Say England Must Not Depend on Russia

LONDON, Aug. 29.

THE military correspondent of the Times in his comment on the war today says:

"There is a great difference between the tasks of the allies in the Western and Eastern theaters of war.

"In the West our task is stone-walling; that of the Russians is steam-rolling.

"The situation in the West is such that only an extraordinary stroke of good fortune could give us a smashing victory and enable us to annihilate the foe. It is our business to keep our wicket up, while Russia makes the runs. We must fight back, if need be, to the Atlantic ropes without allowing ourselves to be knocked out.

"The Russians have a most brilliant role in this war. Russia must reach Berlin within a couple of months. If at the end of that time our claws are still fast in the German armies in the West, and if Servia still has her teeth in Austria's back, then the strategic and political object of the war will be achieved."

England's Fate Hangs on French Fighting

THE London Morning Post's military correspondent publishes today a grave warning to the nation. He says:

"The great issue now is being fought out in France and our future as a nation and an empire depends on the decision. We must not cling too blindly to the hope that should it be adverse the might of Russia will retrieve the situation.

"The numbers of men which Russia can put in the field have been grossly exaggerated.

"In Paris also there is an inclination to make too much of Russia's successes in East Prussia. German forces on the Russian frontier are comparatively insignificant. Germans are quite content to let the Russians overrun the province and knock their heads against the fortresses of the Vistula or even reach the last line of defense on the Oder."

Britain Must Send All Available Men to War

A DAILY MAIL editorial concerning the concentration of the Germans in immense strength to crush the British expeditionary force says:

"The situation is most critical. France has done everything in her power. Russia cannot help except by indirect pressure. Great Britain alone can find more men, and find them she must. The nation must prepare on a colossal scale, and must send every man and every gun that can be spared here and now to the decisive point in France."

Czar, Colonel-in-Chief of Scots Greys, Sends Greeting

LONDON, Aug. 29, 4:55 p. m.—The official press bureau has issued the following notice:

"His Majesty, the Emperor of Russia, who is Colonel-in-chief of the Scots Greys, has sent the following gracious message to his regiment:

"'I am happy to think that my gallant regiment, the Royal Scots Greys, is fighting with Russia against the common enemy. Convinced that they will uphold the gracious traditions of the past, I send them my warm greetings and wish them victory in battle.'"

ST. LOUIS TEACHER DENIES REPORT OF GERMAN CRUELTY

High School Instructor Just Back From Berlin Says Americans Were Well Treated.

A. Kenngott of 1812 Compton avenue, instructor in German at the McKinley High School, returned home last night from Berlin, where he was staying when the Powers began war. He came over on the Noordam, sailing from Rotterdam.

"There was little of mob excitement in Berlin when the war declaration was made," he said. "Everyone seemed to realize that a great moment in Germany's history had come."

He said that stories of German cruelty to foreigners and inconsideration to Americans especially, were groundless.

"I know of one instance of a young Russian," he said, "who started for the frontier. For some reason he could not get into Russia. He walked back to Berlin. When he explained his case to officials there they took him in and fed him and cared for him as one of their own countrymen.

"The American embassy distributed small American flags, and these we wore on our coat lapels when outside our rooms. That little flag brought us every courtesy possible.

"On Aug. 10 I left Berlin for Rotterdam. The trip, ordinarily made in 12 hours, consumed three days, owing to numerous stops for inspection. Hundreds of soldiers were going to the front on it, and here again German courtesy was shown. I was in a compartment made for six people. They crowded 17 in, among them half a dozen soldiers. One of the latter gave me his seat, insisted that I take it, saying that he was the younger and well able to stand during the long trip.

"When I took the Noordam at Rotterdam I was very fortunate in getting a cabin, as the boat, intended for about 1000 passengers, or less, had booked over 2000.

"It was on this trip home that so many suffered from discomfort. There were only 40 steamer chairs on the entire vessel—and the smoking room was very, very small indeed for such a crowd. The great majority of us suffered keenly having to stand so much."

Kenngott found that there were many teachers stranded abroad, but that they were rapidly being provided for. He said his main anxiety was to return to St. Louis in time for school opening.

French War Office Honors 6 Officers Killed in Battle

PARIS, Aug. 29.

AN official communication says that a General commanding an army has mentioned, in the army orders of the day, the names of six Under-Lieutenants who were killed in battle Aug. 20.

Second Lieutenant Vialla of the Fourth Battalion of Riflemen, fell mortally wounded at the moment when, at the head of his section, he was making a counter bayonet charge. The other five were mentioned for conspicuous gallantry. The War Office adds:

"These citations, in orders to the army, are the supreme recompense which it is possible to give their memories and their families."

French Refugees Sent to Factories or Fields

PARIS, Aug. 29.—Many more French and Belgian refugees arrived here today and were immediately forwarded to the Central and Southern departments of France. They will be employed there in factories or in harvesting the crops.

The Post-Dispatch is the only evening newspaper in St. Louis that receives or publishes news gathered by the Associated Press.

BUSCHES ALL ARE SAFE

Now at Chateau on Rhine, Expect to Sail for Home Sept. 12.

A cablegram to Otto G. Schubert of 1747 Waverly place, yesterday afternoon, announced that the party of August A. Busch, which has been abroad several months, is safe at Mrs. Adolphus Busch's home, Villa Lily, Langenschwalbach, Germany. In the party are Mr. and Mrs. Busch, their daughters, Misses Marie and Clara, their son, August A. Jr.; Mrs. Mollie Faust Giannini and Mr. and Mrs. Otto Schubert, parents of the receiver of the cablegram.

The message stated all members of the party were safe and well at the chateau on the Rhine and that they expected to sail from Holland on the New Amsterdam, Sept. 12.

A telegram last night announced that William Marion Reedy, editor of the Mirror, and Harry B. Hawes, who have been abroad for several months, had arrived in New York City.

French Bank Depositors Now May Draw 10 Per Cent

PARIS, Aug. 29.—At a meeting of the Council of Ministers this evening the decree for a new moratorium was signed whereby bank depositors may draw 10 per cent of the balances credited to them for the payment of salaries or for the purchase of raw materials.

The purpose is to encourage the resumption of commerce and industry.

BEATEN TWICE, CARDS FALL TO THIRD PLACE

SPORTING SECTION ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH SPORTING SECTION

PART FOUR. ST. LOUIS, SUNDAY MORNING, AUGUST 30, 1914.

TERRIERS DEFEAT CHIFEDS 1-0 IN PITCHERS' BATTLE

Prendergast Strong, for the Tinks, but Davenport Excelled in Pinches.

Fielder Jones' Record Since Joining Federals Is 3 Wins, 1 Loss, 1 Tie

FIELDER JONES now has been a Federal League manager for one week. In this short period the Terriers have put up a different article of ball under his direction. More dash, more fight, and more victories in the long run have resulted.

The Terriers have played five contests under him, three of them wins, one loss and one tied game. Last Saturday, his first day, they beat Baltimore, 6—2. They came back with a 4—3 win over the Terrapins Sunday, and won over the Chifeds, 1—0, yesterday. They were beaten by the Tinx, 2—1, in a 10-inning game Wednesday. Thursday the two teams struggled 10 innings to a 3—3 tie.

Fielder Jones' rejuvenated Terriers played real baseball, yesterday. They beat Joe Tinker's pennant contending Chifeds, 1—0, in an excellently played game.

It was "Long Dave" Davenport against Michael Angelo Prendergast and both twirlers gave great exhibitions. As far as the hit column is concerned, Prendergast had the better of the argument, allowing only three hits. However, Davenport, although nicked for six safeties, was invincible in the pinches.

Two were out in the eighth inning, with Misse resting on second, when Eddie Tobin laced a clean single to right, scoring Misse. Flack, the right fielder, allowed the ball to go through him, Tobin going to third where he was left when Miller rolled out. Misse had got as far as the middle station on being hit by a pitched ball and a sacrifice.

The Tinkermen had a number of chances to score, but were unable to touch Davenport when the elongated one was in distress. In fact, they had the local followers worried with a short rally in the ninth until Dave struck out a pinch-hitter. Zwilling had led off with a single, and gone to third on two infield outs. Walsh was then sent up to hit for Stanley, but was easy prey for Dave's fast breaking curve.

Chifeds' Rally Fails.

The Chicagoans threatened also in the fifth. After Beck had struck out, Stanley walked. Farrell then singled, sending Stanley to second. A wild throw by Davenport, who tried to pick Stanley off second, put the little shortstop on third and Farrell on second. The ex-Cincinnati Red then struck out Prendergast and made Flack pop to Ward Miller.

Beck doubled in the second with two down, but was left when Stanley flied out.

Aside from the inning in which they scored, the locals did not have much of a chance to tally. Davenport, first up in the sixth, surprised himself and the spectators by bouncing a single off Prendergast, but immediately killed the possible rally by allowing himself to be picked off of first. With two down in the seventh, Crandall walked and immediately purloined second. Boucher then rolled out.

The two teams will meet again this afternoon, after which they will hie to Chicago for a game Monday on "Fielder Jones day." The Terriers then come back for a four-game stay with George Stovall's Kansas City Packers. This will be the Terriers' last series in the local park this season.

Travis and Herreshoff Defeat America's Best Amateurs in Golf Event

MANCHESTER, Vt., Aug. 29.—Walter J. Travis and Fred G. Herreshoff, representing the Garden City Golf Club today won the best fall foursome competition for the American golfer's silver trophy over the links of the Ekwanok Country Club, where the national amateur championship tournament is to begin Monday. Travis and Herreshoff returned a card of 74.

Francis Ouimet and F. H. Hoyt, playing for the Woodland Golf Club of Boston, were tied for fourth place with a 78. Charles Evans jr. and William Howland jr., representing the Chicago Golf Club made the round in 75. Jerome Travers and Gilman Tiffany, playing for the Mohawk Golf Club, returned no cards.

It was learned definitely tonight that Warren K. Wood, former western champion, would not compete in the championship and the entry of Parker G. Whittemore, former Massachusetts champion, is uncertain.

Forty-eight hours of rain has made the course heavy and today's play put the greens in many places.

HILDA STOESSEL FAVORED TO WIN TWO-MILE SWIM

Winner of Last Year's Race Fails to Enter Today's Contest.

Facts About Today's Swim.

EVENT—Third Annual Western Rowing Club women's river swim.

DISTANCE—Two miles.

START—Foot of Cherokee street.

FINSH — Western Rowing Club.

STARTING TIME—4:00 o'clock.

PROBABLE FINSHING TIME—4:30 o'clock.

NUMBER OF ENTRIES—Twenty.

REFEREE—Marion F. Parker.

STARTER—William Westhus.

At a signal given by Starter William Westhus, 4 o'clock this afternoon, 20 women swimmers will start their two-mile journey down the Mississippi River to the Western Rowing Club. The event is the third annual women's swim, given by the Western Rowing Club, and, strange to say, has the same number of contestants as the two previous races. The start will be at the foot of Cherokee street.

If the race is anywhere as close as it was last year, spectators may be assured of a thrilling finish. In the 1913 race, a scant 10 yards separated the first two. Miss Bernice Werfs was the winner, while Hilda Stoessel was the one who gave her such a strenuous battle. The time last year was 30m. 42 2-5s. Miss Werfs has not entered in today's race, and consequently Miss Stoessel, who will swim under the blue and white of the Western Rowing Club, is the favorite. However, many others who are entered today put up a splendid fight last year, and it may be the case of a dark horse winning out.

Many Clubs Represented.

The entry is made up of representatives of local athletic clubs, canoe clubs and natatoriums. Three entrants hail from neighboring towns—Miss Pauline Rolfe of East St. Louis, Miss Bertha Hastings of Belleville and Mrs. Emma Stussel of Maplewood.

Seven girls barely in their teens applied for entry, but were denied, as it was decided to set 16 years as the required age. It was stated that the course would be patroled by harbor officials.

The list of entrants is as follows:

Misses Evelyn Burnett, Carondelet Motor Boat Club; Regina Sonnenschein, Forest Park Highlands; Florence Tiarks, Columbian Athletic Club; Hilda Stoessel, Western Rowing Club; Mercia Sachs, unattached; Pauline Rolfe, East St. Louis; Margaret Duff, Fairgrounds pool; Mrs. H. Bain, unattached; Mrs. Catherine Gross, unattached; Miss Frances Billsbarrow, Lorell Pool; Miss Grace Stewart, Fairgrounds Pool; Mrs. May Elliott, unattached; Miss Bertha Hastings, Belleville, Ill.; Miss Nell Ramsey, unattached; Miss Naomi Weinel, Jones Park, East St. Louis; Mrs. Emma Stussel, Maplewood Pool; Miss Anna Knoedelseder, Cemaren Canoe Club; Miss Ethel Titsworth, unattached; Miss Earline Pershall, unattached; Miss Clair Farry, Winona Club.

Huggins Cripples Pitching Staff in Attempt to Win One

MANAGER HUGGINS used up four pitchers in a vain attempt to win one of the two games yesterday and he is badly off for a man to send against the Braves today in the final skirmish. He worked Perritt, Doak, Sallee and Griner yesterday, leaving him only Perdue, who worked seven innings Thursday, and Robinson, a cripple, for this afternoon. He probably will pitch Perdue.

Stallings, on the other hand, out-maneuvered Huggins. He saved George Tyler, a reliable southpaw, for this afternoon's game, and should have a decided edge. The Cards must win today to get an even break.

MARQUARD LOSES GOOD GAME, MATTY WINS ON ERRORS

Chicago Crowd Threatens Riot as Mounted Police Invade the Field.

CHICAGO, Aug. 29.—Chicago and New York divided a double header here today, the locals winning the first game, 1—0, and losing the second 5—7.

Jimmy Johnston, utility second baseman, was la[illegible]sponsible for Chicago losing th[illegible]cond combat. His three errors all aided the visitors, who bunched their hits behind his misplays. In the second game Saier made his sixteenth home run of the season.

A brief riot added to the excitement of the play when a special detail of mounted police appeared to aid in keeping back the crowd from the field, and did not subside until the mounted police were withdrawn.

"Has Huggins got a chance to cop?"
Said Rooter-on-Parare.
"My lip is split, I wish you'd stop,"
The Center Fielder said.
"In fact, it is so easy it's a shame to take the dough;
We'll win the big world's series, taking four right in a row.
The outlook is so rosy that I made a date to go
And buy a wealthy wagon, in the mornin'."

When it comes to getting first base on balls, Rabbit Huggins wins in a walk.

BROWNS TO PLAY SIX GAMES IN 3 DAYS AT BOSTON

Hard Work and Defeats Stare Rickeyites in Face, Thanks to Rain.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 29.—Rain spoiled the double-header scheduled at Fenway Park this afternoon between Bill Carrigan's Red Sox and the St. Louis Browns, and as a direct result of the rain today, and the resulting postponement of the dual bill, Hub fans will be served with a near record number of games next week. There will be 10 games played at Fenway Park next week, two Monday against the Browns, a couple more Tuesday and a final pair with the Rickeyites Wednesday afternoon.

No rest for the weary Red Sox. For no sooner do the Browns turn backs on Boston and start for the West than Mahout Connie Mack of those Philadelphia White Elephants leads his terrific horde into town for four games in the last three days of the week.

The St. Louis Browns have been fairly jonahed in Boston this year with bad weather and postponements. It was confidently expected that the double bill on a Saturday afternoon would do much to recoup the losses occasioned the Browns' exchequer by those early season losses.

Pitchers Not to Blame.

Branch Rickey doesn't try to blame his pitchers for the drop the Browns have taken from a berth within striking distance of the lead to sixth place. As a matter of fact, the attorney-manager says that if the rest of his team had lived up to their duties as well as his pitchers, an altogether different complexion to the pennant race in the American League would be discernible.

Game after game has been dropped by the Browns because of loose fielding and weak, infrequent hitting. The runs scored against the St. Louis Browns show that the pitchers have been holding up their end. But it's an axiom in big league baseball that the pitching staff is not to blame for defeat when the team can't go out and make at least two runs, or three.

Red Sox Remember Defeats.

The Lanins are eager to get at these Brownies. The count between the two clubs for the season to date is eight wins for Boston and five for St. Louis. But half way through the last Western trip, when things looked very bright for them to overhaul the Mackmen, the Red Sox stacked up against St. Louis and lost three out of four. The three losses were consecutive affairs and preceded the one win. Carl Weilman beat Foster in the first of these games, 1 to 0; Bill James slipped over a 6 to 1 win the next day on Vean Gregg, and then Earl Hamilton got the better of Ernie Shore, 2 to 1. And it might be added that the getaway game in the Mound City saw Dutch Leonard spank the saucy Browns, 6 to 0. These three losses in St. Louis hurt the spirit of the Red Sox and gave the A's a chance to pile up a lead.

SUBSTITUTION OF SAL FOR DOAK PROVES DISASTROUS IN 2D GAME

Usually Reliable Southpaw Passes Three Men and Is Hit for a Triple in Game Stopped After Eight Innings Because of Darkness—Cards Helpless Before James in Opening Battle—Scores 4--0 and 6--4.

By W. J. O'CONNOR.

AFTER all returns were in at a late hour last night it was officially announced from the war office at Vandeventer avenue and Natural Bridge road that the St. Louis division of the National League army had suffered heavily in an engagement with the Boston invaders.

"Our forces have been falling back from the second to the third line of entrenchment for very good reasons" was a statement made by Field Marshal Huggins.

A message that escaped the censor states that Huggins' men were beaten to a pulp, 4—0, in the first engagement, in which they always were on the defensive, while in the second skirmish, in which for a while they took the offensive, they were routed, 6—4. There is no reason to doubt this message, as it comes from an unbiased source.

Eye Witness Tells of Horrors.

An eye witness to the battle, returning late at night, gave full details of the humiliating rout. The Cardinals in the first game were utterly helpless before Bill James, a lengthy sharpshooter, and made only four hits off him, while the Braves, by a clever bunting game made four runs off five hits gleaned from the delivery of Polly Perritt and Dan Griner.

The Cards deserved to lose this game, but they should be ashamed to acknowledge their colors after losing the final fight. They squared away for the eighth inning with a two-run lead, but when the Braves finished up, the Cards were beaten, 6—4, and Bill Byron, a notorious umpire, then called a halt. It was so dark he couldn't distinguish the players.

Manager Huggins was blamed and severely criticized by the grand stand managers who have second guess, for his conduct in the final battle. He switched from Doak to Sallee in the eighth inning because Doak, who had retired the side in order for three previous innings, slipped a cog and passed one batter and started to do likewise with another. After Evers had walked and one ball was pitched to Connolly, Hug sent Doak to the stable and beckoned for Sallee. This looked like a good move, but what happened later made it look decidedly bad.

Sallee Is Wild.

As Sallee went to the hill, Stallings switched from Connolly to Cather, who inherited the one ball Connolly had received from Doak. Cather then struck out, the third strike being called. Whitted replaced Gilbert as a hitter and Sal passed him. He also walked Schmidt, filling the bases.

Hug sent Perdue out to warm up and the players stalled while Hub unlimbered his arm. Sallee, however, was obliged to pitch to Smith, who hit a long fly to Dolan, letting Evers score.

The Cards still were in the lead, 4—3, and darkness coming, when Maranville went up, with two out and runners on first and second. Sallee was not at his best and pitched poorly to Maranville. He had one strike and one ball on the batter when he gave him a "groove" ball.

Maranville hit a liner to center field. Joe Riggert, stationed there for reasons best known to Huggins, started in, went back and missed the ball completely.

Maranville Hits Triple.

Maranville got a triple, scoring Whitted and Schmidt. Sallee then purposely passed Gowdy. He further complicated matters by making a wild throw to third, trying to catch Maranville off and the Rabbit scored on the error. That put the finishing touches to the ball game. The Cards went to bat in their half of the inning, but it was so dark that they couldn't see Paul Strand's speed. Dolan, Miller and Wilson went out in order.

The truth is that the game should not have been played past the seventh inning. Joe Riggert isn't entirely to blame for his failure to land Maranville's liner, because it was too dark for Joe to judge the drive. Indeed, it was so dark that many unsportsmanlike rooters marveled that Huggins didn't change pitchers and otherwise stall until Umpire Byron would be obliged to call the game on account of darkness. But Hug, probably a little panicky because of Sallee's failure, "didn't do nothin'."

Hug Explains Why He Removed Doak

"I PLAYED the percentage and lost in removing Doak," explained Manager Huggins after yesterday's games. "When Doak passed Evers and threw one wild to Connolly, I figured to play it safe with Sallee. He seldom is, if ever, wild. It was dark and I figured his control would be sure. I took first guess and lost, that's all. I'm not worried over that because it's a part of baseball. I do hate to lose, though."

J. Riggert's Failure to Sacrifice Beat Cards; Braves Bunt in Runs

JOE RIGGERT'S failure to sacrifice did more to lose the second game than did his failure to grab Maranville's liner. The fielding break was excusable because of darkness, but Joe's utter inability to advance Miller and Wilson in the midst of a noisy rally in the fourth inning proved costly.

The Cards opened fire on Hess in this round and for a time it appeared that the Braves would be forced to break ground. Magee singled and stopped at third on Dolan's smash into the left field crowd. Miller doubled, scoring both runners. Wilson was beaned. Then Riggert, with orders to sacrifice, fouled to Smith. Beck followed with a smash that Maranville got back of second and converted into the fastest double play of the day, Evers acting as the middle man with Schmidt.

Maranville was playing close to second to hold Miller on, or he never would have touched Beck's grounder. Had Riggert sacrificed he would have rearranged the Brave defense, as the infield would have been in for a play at the plate and Beck's grounder, instead of being a double play would have netted a single and two runs.

In direct contrast to the Cards' inability to bunt was the successful attack of the Braves in both games. They played the sacrifice every time and got away with it in finished style. Twice in the first game they pulled the squeeze play, once when even the fans felt that the bunt was on. But all the time the Cardinals played like hitching posts, giving in all the dumbest exhibition of baseball of the season.

Perritt was wild and both runs off him had their beginning in a pass. Connolly walked in the fourth inning, moved up on Gilbert's sacrifice and took third when Schmidt scratched an infield hit. Smith then engineered a squeeze bunt, Connolly scoring on the hoof. Smith went out, Magee to Perritt, who crossed over.

The second Boston run was a presentation in the eighth inning. Gowdy walked and stopped at second on James' surprise single. Moran was there with the sacrifice, according to Hoyle. Evers then appeared carrying a sign as big as the Pageant and Masque stage, which said: "I'm going to bunt." But Magee doesn't believe in signs so he laid back near first base. Evers bunted to Magee who barely did get Johnny on a throw to Huggins, while Gowdy meandered home. Gowdy should have been nipped at the plate.

Griner relieved Perritt in the ninth and he was warmly greeted. Gilbert singled. Schmidt was beaned. Of course Smith sacrificed, perfectly, and Maranville followed with a double, scoring Gilbert and Schmidt.

The Cards never came close, although they might have had Magee been able to bunt in the first inning, Wilson in the second or Miller in the third. They all tried and failed. Yet it's a simple trick.

Second 1-0 Defeat for Marquar

Rube Marquard is pitching in luck. He lost yesterday 1—0, to Cubs, this being the second suc verse in less than a week. Bill beat him, 1—0, in the first gam double-header here Wednesday. pitch scored Huggins with the run in that game.

Britton Says Record Crowd of 28,000 Saw Cards' Double Defeat

AN attendance record was set yesterday at Robison Field, according to President Schuyler P. Britton, when over 28,000 fans paid to see the Cardinals lose both ends of a double-header to the belligerent Braves. The turnout excelled by a few the crowd which watched the final game of a spring series in 1908 when Eddie Karger opposed Rube Waddell at the Cardinals' park.

The crowd yesterday was a whopper and overflowed on the field, necessitating the use of mounted police in keeping order. However, the ropes were stretched early and the immense throng was well handled. There was no repetition of the mixup which occurred last Wednesday when the field fans blocked the view of the reserved seat section. The overflow yesterday was kept away from the grand stand.

The gates were opened at 12 o'clock and by 1 p. m., an hour before game time, more than 5000 fans had taken possession of the choice seats.

IVEY WINGO NOW ONLY .300 HITTER ON HUGGINS' TEAM

Lee Magee, .291, Is Next Best and Jack Miller Third, With .286.

One .300 hitter, Ivey Wingo, and he a catcher, may explain the want of a punch that occasionally costs the Cardinals so dearly. The nearest regular to the .300 brigade is Lee Magee, the converted first baseman, who is hitting well indeed. In addition, it may be mentioned that Lee is causing jealousy among the top-notch fielders of his position, since taking the initial sack.

Too many hitters below .250 is the trouble with the Cards, if anything ails the team. Miller, Magee, Wilson and Wingo have to supply most of the "kick" to the club.

At that its team average in hitting exceeds that of Boston by eight points—a considerable margin.

Here are the averages:

McDermott and Goodwin May Be Starters in M. A. A. Ten-Mile Swim Labor Day

Michael McDermott, the well-known swimmer of the Illinois Athletic Club, will enter the annual 10-mile river swim to be held here Labor day. McDermott has won the race twice, and another victory will give his club permanent possession of the cup. "Bud" Goodwin of the New York A. C. may also enter the event. Dr. C. W. Bassett, who is in charge of the event, says an effort will be made to bring Perry McGillivary, the Illinois A. C. star, who has hung up a number of records this year, here for the long swim.

With these foreign entrants in the swim, local paddlers will have to do their best to win honors. The M. A. A. squad will include about eight men, while other athletic clubs, turnvereins and natatoriums will be represented. Many are waiting to see what Herman Laubis, who now is the undisputed local champ, can do against the outsiders. Chauncey Heath's comeback stunt will be watched with interest.

The event will be the first undertaking of the newly organized Missouri Athletic Association. It will be held Sept. 8. The starting point is at the Chain of Rocks and the finish at the center span of Eads Bridge. The Eagle Packet Co. will run excursion boats along the course.

Willard's Backers Ready to Produce $40,000 Real Coin

Johnson Bout Is Goal

Plan Is to Offer Champion $30,000 Win, Lose or Draw, With a $10,000 Forfeit for Appearance, to Ride as Side Bet if Title Holder Wants It So.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.

A PLAN is on foot, promoted by Jack Curley, former manager of Hackenschmidt and Jim Flynn, at different times, and who is now head of a syndicate of men here who are willing to support Jess Willard as "hope" for the world's fight championship, to the tune of $40,000.

A match with Jack Johnson will be sought, to take place in whatever country conditions are most favorable.

Johnson is to receive his customary $30,000 win, lose or draw. A forfeit of $10,000 will be posted and this will go as a side bet on Willard, if the champion so desires.

Curley explains his Willard proposition further as follows:

"My backers, who don't care to have their names mentioned," said Curley last night, "are perfectly willing to put up $40,000 in cash and gamble on making money with Willard. They are convinced that Johnson will be beaten if he ever fights Willard, because Johnson has gone away back. Flynn would have beaten Johnson in New Mexico if he hadn't lost his head and tried to butt Johnson. Johnson was so tired after that nine rounds that he couldn't stand up for half an hour. And he wasn't hit more than a couple of times. He was just forced to hustle around. He must have gone back some more by this time. And Willard is the ideal heavyweight, anyway. He'd make a popular champion. He looks the part.

Expects $250,000 Returns.

"WILLARD has signed a contract for three years. If he is matched with Johnson and wins his backers will make a quarter million with him, at least. They're really getting big odds for their $40,000.

"It doesn't look as if there'd be a chance to fight in Europe for some time. Johnson positively can't come to this country. He might go to Australia, and though they've barred him in the past the idea of having a man like Willard to fight him might make a lot of difference. The Australians would like to see Johnson whipped.

"If not there, the fight could be pulled off just across the Mexican line from San Diego, in Southern California. It would draw a big crowd of Americans. Or it might be held in South America. Argentina and Brazil are going in for boxing, and there's plenty of money in that country. But we don't care so much for the money—this time. It doesn't make any difference whether we get back our guarantee to Johnson or not. If Willard wins the money'll come later on. If he loses, then it's just a gamble, and we'll have a run for it anyway."

It Smells Already.

UNFORTUNATELY, should Willard and Johnson be matched, "fake" rumors will surely go the rounds, and whether or not there was any truth in them the sport of boxing would suffer serious injury. Johnson has absolutely killed all possibility of believing his bouts now are on the level. His written agreement in the Moran affair, by which Moran was to receive a certain increased share of the receipts if he didn't go eight rounds, published in English and French papers, settled that.

Johnson has passed his prime as a fighter. Dissipation and easy living have left him a far less effective fighting machine. His endurance has gone, and after boxing a few rounds he loses his strength and hitting power. So it is quite natural to suspect that he might frame up his bouts to make sure of winning, or to receive a big piece of money to pay him for losing a valuable title.

Personally, I'd like to see Willard fight Johnson. He would probably beat the dusky champ. Willard is naturally a defensive fighter like Johnson and he wouldn't run into anything through over eagerness. When hurt he hits a terrific punch or two before his natural caution returns. He uses a fast and hard left and has great advantages in height, reach, weight and strength. Five years ago Willard would have had no chance with Johnson; today it's a different matter, as Johnson is all in.

Johnson Said to Be "Broke."

BUT it isn't likely Johnson and Willard ever will fight. There'll be no boxing in Europe or England for some time. Even if there were, Johnson would be barred because of the Moran agreement in his handwriting, so widely published. He can't fight any one in Australia, as he has been absolutely barred in that country. And he can't come back here and wouldn't be allowed to fight if he did come.

Johnson is flat broke, getting along on meagre pickings in the vaudeville line—more meagre than ever now because of the big war. Another reason to think he'd be in a proper frame of mind to lose a title.

The best thing, under all circumstances, is to cut Johnson out of all calculation.

By his own actions he is barred from competition in all countries where boxing is a recognized sport. Let Willard, Gunboat Smith, Jeanette, Langford, Sam McVey and whatever other good men develop fight it out—and then we'll have another champion and Johnson and his "agreements" will be forgotten.

YANKEES BEAT TIGERS; CHANCE IS BANISHED

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—In a game prolific in extra-base hitting, New York defeated Detroit today, 6 to 5.

Manager Chance and Umpire Hildebrand became involved in an argument over a soiled ball in the eighth inning. After the umpire had placed it in the New York ball bag Chance took it out and threw it into the outfield. He was promptly ordered off the field. Score:

PEERLESS CANOE CLUB HOLDS REGATTA TODAY

Today promises to be the big day of the year on the Meramec River as the Peerless Canoe Club has scheduled its annual regatta for this afternoon. Five big events are on the program, and each should be of interest.

However, the big race of the day is the one-mile dash, the winner of which will receive a 17-foot canoe. Other events are the tilting contest; standing on gunwales, paddling up and swimming back 100 yards; quarter-mile dash for mixed couples, and a race of unknown distance for war canoes. The program will be followed in the evening by a parade in which some 50 electrically decorated canoes will take part.

PIRATES TAKE FIRST IN THIRTEEN INNINGS

PITTSBURG, Pa., Aug. 29.—Egan's fumble of Wagner's grounder, Wagner's steal of second and McCarthy's single gave Pittsburg a 1 to 0 victory in the thirteenth inning of the first game of a double-header today.

Brooklyn won the second game, 5 to 4, by making long hits at opportune times. The first game was a pitcher's battle between Mamaux and Pfeffer.

Bud Goodwin Winner in National ½-Mile Swim Championship

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—In rough water and through a crosstide the national half-mile swimming championship of the Amateur Athletic Union was won today by L. B. Goodwin of the New York A. C., off Travers Island on Long Island Sound, in 12:55 3-5. Goodwin won by a margin of six yards from his clubmate, J. H. Reilly, who was ten yards in front of H. H. Vollmer, another member of the New York Athletic Club.

Last year's champion, Gilbert Tomlinson, of the Philadelphia Swimming Club, finished fourth, with Robert Dipply, also of the Philadelphia club, sixth.

WALTER JOHNSON LOSES TO SOX' RECRUIT PITCHER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—Walter Johnson suffered another defeat at the hands of a young pitcher today, when, with Wolfgang in the box, Chicago beat Washington, 2 to 1.

In the seventh inning Weaver's single, Fournier's triple and Schalk's single scored two runs. Shanks brought in Washington's run in the ninth, when he singled, took third on Williams' hit and scored on an out. Wolfgang also starred in fielding, accepting 11 chances. Score:

WRAY'S COLUMN

-BECK-

But, on the Other Hand—

CROWDS packed the stands. Thousands outside milled and ground their way by inches toward the entrances: Full-to-overflowing bleachers and pent up grandstand spilled their contents over on the playing field. Policemen and park attendants begged, cursed and fought the hordes off, but as impotently as the old woman who tried to sweep back the rising tide.

In the box offices nervous wrecks tried in vain to handle in orderly fashion the mints of money thrust at them. One of the cash handlers gave over the effort to straighten out the currency and swept it off on to the floor, where he stood ankle-deep in bills of all descriptions—the flotsam left by the waves of humanity that swept over his booth.

BUT, ON THE OTHER HAND—

Out at Federal League Park, at the same time thousands on thousands were lined up in the park stands! But instead of the tangle of humanity that existed over at Robison Field, the Handlan Park thousands were in serried ranks and columns, as orderly as a German regiment on review before the Emperor.

There may not have been quite as many as at Robison Field; but there were many thousands of them, at that.

What! Persons? Why, no! Empty seats!

Comedy and Tragedy.

NOTHING could better illustrate the fickleness of baseball fortune than the 1914 history of the Cardinals and the St. Louis Federals. Over at Robison Field they now are fairly weltering in money; at the Fed's home if anything approaches the park that makes a noise like a paid admission the ticket men make a sortie outside the gates, overwhelm it and drag it in.

One club is on the highway to fortune, the other is doggedly calling on its reserves of iron men, the Landwehr of the treasury, so to speak, in order to keep the wheels revolving.

The one team plays before cheering thousands every day, boosted and praised and talked about. The other plods through its daily grind before empty benches with the doleful-faced club owners looking on in silence, wondering how much each minute of play is costing them.

Four months ago the reverse was true! The cheering thousands were assembled at Federal League Park, while the Cardinals were supposed to be on the ropes with a bum team and a worse future.

That Fortune dame is SOME flirt! You simply can't guess her.

Smile, Batting for Frown!

BUT the long face is one thing they try to bar, at Fed Park. If it hurts they don't wear the grouch wrinkles on the outside very long. On one semimonthly payday the St. Louis players had a particularly unfortunate day, and a mutual friend was giving Callahan of the White Sox an account of it.

"The scorers had to use an adding machine to tab up their errors," he related. "In the front row of the grand stand was Dave Ball, an 'angel,' but not the sort that wears wings. Following the game Ball went down and watched the players get their pay checks. After a bit a smile spread over his face.

"'What's the joke, Phil?' somebody asked him.

"'I was just thinking how funny it was that these players could make so many errors on the field and yet never a one fumbles his pay check!'

"Callahan come across with the punch, all right. 'Ball's learning the game fast,' he remarked, which is what I call putting 'em over high and on the inside."

Miner Brown Pulls a Bobble.

UNLESS Miner Brown throws over the helm and comes about on another tack, he'll be in troubled water, very shortly. Miner steered out of St. Louis port, headed for the isles of don't-give-a-rap, with a spanking breeze behind him, plus the prevailing belief that he could realize on his contract without playing or managing, a la the Cuban lucky dog, Marsans.

But the breeze seems to be just a capful of hot air; and unless Miner Brown scoots back, he'll be minus everything in the shape of contract emoluments. Here's the situation, according to an officer of the Federal League:

Miner Brown has never been notified that his services as manager have been dispensed with.

His contract is signed both as player and manager.

By taking French leave of the club without waiting to talk to the owners or fulfilling his contract either as player or leader, he violates his own contract.

Under the conditions the club could, so its heads state, abrogate their contract with Brown and refuse to pay him.

May Need That Gold Mine.

BROWN was wanted by the club as a pitcher. His services were needed, and the face value of his contract would still have been forthcoming, had he performed even the playing part of his obligation, so an officer of the club states.

Brown's contract is a steep one—unbelieveably so, in fact. And it is doubtful if even Tinker would take him over at the salary the document calls for.

There is a large cold place called the OUTSIDE awaiting Brownie, just because he exploded at half-cock.

Brown Has No Kick.

THE Miner really hasn't the slightest complaint coming to him. He was a failure and with the very implements he himself chose. He had free rein from last winter to assemble a team and he couldn't make it win. The RESPONSIBLITY FOR THE FAILURE COULD NOT FAIRLY BE PLACED ELSEWHERE than on the shoulders of the Miner.

Brown has been toting grievances against club owners ever since Murphy handed him a raw deal by slipping him to Louisville, whence he was rescued by Tinker. Garry Herrmann owes him $1000, he avers. But Ball and Stifel seem to have treated him much better than he treated them.

FORMER NATIONAL PLAYER LEADING AMERICAN HITTER

Hoblitzel Still Maintains His Advantage of Jackson and Cobb.

Hoblitzel, a National League (Cincinnati) castoff, is still leading the American League race, having been batting the ball freely since joining the American League. Mitchell, sold by Pittsburg to Washington, after the National League wise owls had waived on him, is leading Cobb, and is very close to the front.

Cobb is within striking distance of first place, however, and is still, with Jackson, second place man, a factor to be feared by the leaders.

Clarence Walker, league leader early in the season, is just barely tarrying in the reserved .300 section.

DODGE BROS.' MAN IS SIFTING LOCAL TRADE

L. E. Rood, representative for Dodge Bros. in this district, was in St. Louis last week, and is responsible for the statement that the appointment of dealers for the sale of the new Dodge Bros.' motor car are about to be made in this section. Mr. Rood is full of enthusiasm about the new car, the firm and the policy behind it.

"When I was in Detroit a short time ago," said Mr. Rood, "about 2000 applications from dealers asking for selling rights had been received. That number has jumped to 4400. I do not believe a condition like this has ever before existed in the motor car industry. Dodge Bros., with their immense works and millions of money, are to market a motor car of their own in the fall. At one step they will throw their entire facilities into the production of the one car. The output, of course, will be large. This fact, and the reputation of the firm seems to have an electrical effect on the dealers, and on everyone interested in motor cars.

"In some of my towns practically every good dealer wants the agency. My work just now centers in determining who are the best dealers, rather than in selling our cars or our proposition. The strength of the Dodge Bros.' name and reputation has already done all the selling necessary. I have been alloted a fair proportion of the year's output for my territory, but I am sorry it isn't twice as large."

Several local firms and individuals have applied for the agency.

MOVIES SHOW CARS IN THRILLING STUNTS

More than 100 dealers in automobiles were the guests Friday of the local representatives of the Maxwell Motor Sales Corporation, L. A. Hannan and E. W. Fuhr, at a dinner at the Hotel Jefferson. They were shown the 1915 Maxwell car, set in the center of the big dining room, and then given the first view of the Maxwell motion pictures, entitled "From Molten Steel to Automobile," which is a recent and very unique method of instructing all of the Maxwell Motor Sales Corporation representatives just how motor cars are built in quantities. Four thousand feet of film was necessary to portray this famous factory in action.

Beginning at the steel mines, leading on down through the chemical laboratory, the forge department, the acres and acres of machine shops, then the engine assembly, the chassis assembly and the final car assembly was shown, together with possibly the most interesting road tests that have ever been pictured. In fact, the cards are laid face upon the table, and no secrets in the manufacture and production of motor car were withheld.

The Maxwell Motor Sales Corporation believes that every man will be stronger and better equipped to present the merits of the Maxwell 25 by attending these moving picture lectures. Coupled with the instructive feature of the lecture, the last reel is given over to travelogues, showing views of various parts of the country, and incidentally showing just what the Maxwell 25 is capable of doing under various conditions. Pictures of California in all her beauty and splendor; pictures taken of the Cascade range in Oregon and Washington; also pictures of the now famous record-breaking drive of Wild Bill Turner in his Maxwell 25 up Mount Hamilton, in California, where the official record was lowered 16¾ minutes by him.

The lecture was delivered by a special factory representative, C. M. Strieby, who is thoroughly familiar with the subject and explained the more interesting operation in detail and with finesse.

District Supervisor Charles R. Newby, also from the factory, followed with a talk on salesmanship, and brought out the close relations that must exist between the manufacturer and agents, touching on what a tremendous task it is to produce 60,000 cars a year.

The luncheon was one of the largest of its kind ever held in this city. In addition to a number of St. Louisans, there were present:

Illinois guests: Jacob Hall, Galisha, Ill.; C. E. Stein, Brownstown; John Feltsam, Oakville; Arthur Mohr, Oakville; C. P. Casey, Carrollton; H. P. Craigcroft, Vandalia; Orlie E. King St. Peter; A. F. THE NEW PACKARD
"3-38" IS HERE

The latest Packard Six which invites your patronage, is a continuation of last year's "38", with such additional refinements as were possible

The sum of its distinctive features can be found in no other car, and like its predecessor, which so gloriously paved the way, the advance orders indicate the demand will far exceed the season's output

These points in it are brought to your attention:

Left Drive
Short Turning Radius
Packard Centralized Control Board
Packard-Bijur Electric Starter
Packard-Bijur Electric Lights
Separate Magneto Ignition
Packard Unit Power Plant
Mud Tight Motor
Water-Jacketed Intake Header
Concealed Force Feed Oiling to 35 Points
Water-Jacketed Packard Carburetor
Seven-Bearing Crank Shaft
Packard Windshield
Packard One-Man Top
Packard Rear Axle Transmission
Packard Worm Bevel Driving Gears

Exclusive Imported Upholstering Materials,
Twenty Different Packard Body Styles

We shall be pleased to have you look it over.

Prove to yourself by a cross-country run the Packard superiority in riding qualities.

FIRST SHOW OF 1915 MOTOR CARS IN ST. LOUIS OCT. 5

Announcement of Features of Eighth Annual Auto Show Made by Show Committee.

Every automobile and accessory dealer in St. Louis received from the St. Louis Automobile Manufacturers and Dealers' Association, Saturday morning, the plats for its eighth annual automobile show, which will be held at Forest Park Highlands, Oct. 5—10. This is the first large automobile show of the 1914-1915 season, and second to none in importance, as it is at this show that the public first see the new models. This showing of the new models, accessories and parts four months in advance of the big national show at Madison Square, New York City, is of great advantage of the Western manufacturer and dealer, in that it attracts motorists from the South and Southwest and West to the St. Louis market, who on account of the open fall and winter seasons have a long motoring period.

An improved position is allotted to the accessory department in the southeast pavilion, adjoining the ladies' rest room, in space heretofore used for the display of automobiles. The concession booths, heretofore used for the accessory displays, on the northwest side of Forest Park Highlands, will be used for displaying decorated fine delivery wagons, which it is desired to keep out of the weather.

Heavy Demand for Space.

A departure this year will be the omission of music. It has been found that the efforts of the bandmaster to play good music for the entertainment of the throngs of visitors has interfered many times with salesmen talking to prospects. The only music at the show will therefore be the string orchestra at the exhibitors' annual ball, Thursday night, Oct. 8 This ball is to be by special invitation.

The demand for space this year is larger than previous years because there are more dealers in St. Louis. The Show Committee is working on a plan whereby every manufacturer and dealer in St. Louis will have an opportunity to display his 1915 cars

The exhibit of trucks, delivery and other commercial motor vehicles is expected to be larger than that of previous years. St. Louis delivery is fast becoming motorized; 48 different makes of commercial cars are now represented by manufacturers and dealers in St. Louis.

A new feature will be the display of cycle-cars and voiturettes. The display will include six different makes of these little cars, which are now represented in St. Louis and will be shown for the first time in the St. Louis Show.

The Show Comimttee has received bids from four or five skilled decorators for the embellishment of Forest Park Highlands and its transformation into an Autumn forest scene. The al fresco effect of the St. Louis Automobile Show is one of its distinctive features and has received much commendatory comment from manufacturers, dealers and visitors from every part of the United States, Canada and even from Europeans. It affords a perfect setting alike for the handsome pleasure motor vehicle or the rakish roadster and shows the car off to better advantage than an indoor bunting decorated exhibit hall.

Accessory Trade Recognized.

For the first time in the history of the St. Louis Automobile Show the accessory trade has been recognized officially by the appointment of a member of the Motor Accessory Trade Association on the Show Committee. This action was taken by the board of directors of the St. Louis Automobile Manufacturers' and Dealers' Association, which conducts the Automobile Show, and W. K. Norris, president of the Accessories Association, was requested to designate some one from his association to serve. Allan H. Clark, vice-president of the Vehicle Top and Supply Co. was appointed as the accessory member of the Show Committee.

The Show Committee this year consists of T. L. Hausman, Overland Automobile Co., chairman; Jos. A. Schlecht, Mound City Buggy Co.; Samuel Breadon, Western Automobile Co.; Ralph Doak, Woods Electric Vehicle Co.; A. L. Elwood, Locomobile Co. of Missouri; J. D. Perry Lewis, Lewis Automobile Co.; Allan H. Clark, Vehicle Top and Supply Co. Capt. Robert E. Lee has again been made Show Manager for the fifth time.

The specifications on the plats sent out by Show Manager Lee say the application for space must be in the hands of the Show Committee not later than Sept. 5. The Show Committee will meet Sept. 10, when the allotment to the exhibitors of motor vehicles will be made. The accessories allotment will not be made until a later date.

MADE 180 MILES A DAY

Averaging over 180 miles per day, Mr and Mrs F. I. Morris of Los Angeles traveled across the Continent this summer in their Franklin roadster. Their route led them through San Francisco, Salt Lake City, Denver, Kansas City, St. Louis and Buffalo.

Their actual time on the road in going 4400 miles was 24 days. From Los Angeles to St. Louis they carried with them a third passenger. When they arrived at the Franklin factory in Syracuse the same air was in three of the tires that was in when they left Los Angeles. One tire was punctured twice by nails.

GOODYEAR TIRES AT ANTE-BELLUM PRICES

The Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. announce "No war prices on Goodyear tires." Mr. F. A. Sieberling, president of the company, thus explains their unique position,

"We advanced Goodyear prices, as others did theirs, when the rubber panic came. Almost in a day crude rubber rose in New York from 55 cents per pound to much over a dollar. And, as most of the world's rubber comes via London or Antwerp, we saw no way out for a time. The New York supply was too small to consider. European exchange was entirely suspended. Merchant ships had ceased running.

"But we have an almost world-wide organization, and we brought it at once into play. We are the world's largest buyers of high-grade rubber, so we have our own experts in London, Colombo, Singapore and Para.

"We cabled our London people to buy up the pick of the rubber there. By acting quickly and paying cash they obtained 1,500,000 pounds of the finest rubber there. They bought before the advance—before the other buyers saw a way to get London exchange or to bring the rubber here.

"That big supply of rubber is now nearly all on the way to the Goodyear factory in Akron. It constitutes the best of the London supply. On the inferior grades remaining, prices have since been rapidly advanced.

"We have since taken other steps to insure us a continuous supply, all of the highest grade rubber. In all the chief sources of rubber supply we have experts on the ground.

"The result is that Goodyear tire prices are now the same as in June. We are using the same grade of rubber and the same amount of it as we always have used in these tires.

"We are running our factory with three shifts of men, 24 hours a day. So long as we remain in this fortunate position on rubber, we shall supply tire users at before-war prices to the limt of our capacity."

EXPORTS OF MOTOR CARS HAVE NOT BEEN STOPPED

Mr. F. W. A. Vesper of the Vesper Buick Auto Co. has just returned from a trip to the factory of the Buick Motor Co. at Flint, Mich., and on his return said:

"I found considerable speculation as to what would become of the orders taken in Europe for American cars, and the opinion seemed to be that there would be no exports to these countries this year. But the exporting companies through whom the cars are ordinarily sold are not canceling any orders, but were taking them as scheduled and were making shipments to South America, Australia, Africa and even to Japan and China. As most of the foreign cars are different in design, particularly as applied to bodies, etc., they cannot very well be altered for use in this country, for it is a fact that most all of the export cars are right-hand drive, whereas mostly all of our cars are left-hand drive.

'Besides this very few electric starters or electric lights are used in foreign countries, hence a factory ordinarily makes up a foreign schedule and must depend on foreign orders to take the cars.

"In my opinion, I cannot help but feel that the foreign business will be affected, and that sooner or later the export companies will be up against the proposition of placing the cars that they have accumulated, but up to this time they seem to feel that other markets will absorb the cars that they will lose in European countries."

Mr. Vesper stated that the Buick factory was now building over 200 cars per day, and that their average shipments were assuming mid-season proportions, and that a full force of workmen were employed, all of which is unusual this early in the season.

NEW FRANKLIN SHOWN

The Franklin Auto and Supply Co., local dealer in Franklin automobiles, has just received the first car of the sixth series of the Franklin Six-Thirty to be sent to St. Louis.

The Franklin, which has always been distinctive in its appearance, made allowable by its direct cooled engine, presents even still more graceful lines than ever. The body is larger, seat sides higher, and the upholstery is finished off in a roll around tops of seats, giving a more luxuriant and comfortable look to the car.

The French type of hood, in use some years, has been improved in lines and gives the car a more sturdy and powerful appearance. A shutter effect is used in the front of the hood instead of the old type grill.

In spite of increased size, many added improvements and additional and better equipment, the weight of the car remains about the same. The Franklin Six-Thirty weighs but 2750 pounds complete with all equipment.

The Franklin has for years held the world's record on gasoline mileage. In just a recent test 94 Franklin stock touring cars in all parts of the United States and Canada, operating under all conditions of roads and weather, and with 94 different drivers averaged 32.8 miles on a single gallon of gasoline.

GOVERNOR TURNS FROM HORSE TO MOTOR CAR

Gov. Samuel B. Ralston of Indiana has always been an ardent lover of horses. He loves them yet, but has learned to love the motor car also, as evidenced by his recent purchase of a Cadillac. Now a part of the executive stables has been turned into a garage, and the Governor uses the Cadillac more often than he drives out behind his fine horses.

Whether Gov. Ralston will learn to drive the car is a question. For the present, he says, his son will do the driving. For a long time the Governor has been besought by automobile men to add a car to the executive equipages, and for a long time resisted all attempts to get his name on the State license lists. But he could not resist the lure of the Cadillac. He says he is proud of his selection and that the members of his family are exceedingly well satisfied with it.

U. S. HAS HEAVY LEAD IN MOTOR CAR USE

One-fourth of all the motor cars of the world are owned in the United States. There are now 1,400,000 registered cars in this country.

Great Britain is second, with 250,000 and France third, with 93,000. Persia has 13 and Liberia, one. Many large cities in foreign countries no motor cars.

For instance, Canton, China, with its population in excess of 2,000,000, is now awaiting arrival of its first vehicle which does not have to be pulled by a donkey.

CARS FOR WAR USE

Twenty-two Overland automobiles were sold and delivered on August 5 to the War Department of Great Britain, according to word received from John N. Willys, president of the Willys-Overland Co., who has just returned from England. Together with a number of automobiles of the same make already in the service of the English army, the new cars will be used for patrolling and guarding the coasts.

SEDAN TOP COMES OFF

"The detachable Sedan top, offered in connection with the new Kissel Kar '36,' is creating great interest among physicians," says O. L. Curtis. Of all automobile buyers it is the physician who finds his car the most useful. In fact, it is a necessity with him. A top that can be used in winter and taken off in spring, without expense and delay, appeals particularly to him for self-evident reasons.

DRIVERS NEED COURSE IN HIGHER MATHEMATICS

H. H. Emmons, secretary and treasurer of the Regal Motor Car Co., was discussing street traffic regulations in the lobby of a Chicago hotel.

"Over in Detroit," said Emmons, "we have a highly educated Commissioner of Police, and our demonstrators at the factory have had to add a course in geometry to the regular curriculum leading to the chauffer's degree.

"All cross walks in the center of the city are lined out with white paint and space is also marked off for foot passengers to stand within, next to the street car stops. Then we have lines drawn at the curb to insure parking cars at the proper angles in the spaces set apart. Taking it altogether, it is one of the best safety first propositions I ever saw.

"Here's how an amateur driver worked it out some days ago trying to pilot a new Regal through the city. He started with the city hall as one side of a triangle, constructed the other two sides by using the Pontchartrain Hotel and the Detroit Opera House as the other points and then he drew the medians. That gave him the Soldier's Monument as a center. From that he made a bee-line for the Majestic building, but drove 17 feet and struck a trapezoid filled with people waiting for a car. He had to use theorem 61 to get around them. Once he had the car at right angles with a fruit stand, but described an arc and shot off on a tangent.

"By the aid of a draftsman, a compass and the traffic officer, he got away with only a few split nerves. 'If the rest of the Regal holds up as that steering gear did, I'm satisfied,' he said, as he settled back to cover 50 miles of country roads.

PAIGE
"The Greatest Automobile Value In The Entire Industry"

Many automobile men — well informed judges of motor car values—have used these very words in describing the new Paige "36" for 1915.

They have carefully examined this car from every possible angle and it is their unanimous decision that there is no car in America which offers so much for the money.

If you stop to consider the matter for a moment, you will realize that this is quite the most satisfactory form of praise which can be bestowed upon any automobile.

To offer the greatest value for the money means that Paige cars are the soundest investment in the automobile market. To offer the most value for the money means that the Paige has once more established a new standard for cars in the moderate price field.

Any manufacturer with the necessary manufacturing facilities can easily produce a car and sell it at a popular price, but it is quite another thing to produce a car which—dollar for dollar—offers more intrinsic value than any other automobile in the world.

Make it a point to see the new Paige "36" before another day goes by. Then you will understand why this model has created such a sensation throughout the country wherever motor cars are displayed.

AUTO NEWS AND GOSSIP

J. B. Eccleston, recently with the Oakland company, has been made general sales manager of the Apperson Bros. Automobile Co. of Kokomo, Ind.

R. E. Mull, sales manager of the Johnson Automobile Co., brings the news from the Empire factory at Indianapolis that the first of the Empire, 1915, line will reach St. Louis this week.

A. M. Stanley, St. Louis manager for the Fisk Tire and Rubber Co., was in Chicago three days last week on tire business.

The Wagenhals Motor Car Co., builder of the three-wheel delivery car, has located at 3908 Washington avenue, in handsome salesrooms.

The Imperial Oil Co., of which E. S. Marvin is manager, has temporarily taken half of the building at 3124 Locust street, and as soon as the Phoenix Auto Supply Co. moves out will occupy the entire building.

J. C. Kardell and Harry Steiner of the Kardell Motor Car Co. have returned from their vacation trip, which included the Reo and Chevrolet factories in Michigan.

Briggs & Morse have taken the agency for St. Louis and surrounding territory for the Brisco car, built by Benjamin Brisco. The car will sell for $750 and the first will reach St. Louis Sept. 17.

R. E. Campbell, manager of the accessory department of the H. W. Johns Manville Co., at 3118 Locust street, is showing the new "J—M Lens" for headlights, which dims without diminishing the light, but rather accentuates it directly on the roadway.

W. T. Flynn, until recently with Bart S. Adams, is now connected with the Guenther-Methudy Sales Co., agents for Ajax tires. Flynn has been in the accessory business since 1907.

A significant telegram from the American Consul at St. Petersburg, Russia, says that an American there is in the market for all available one to three ton motor trucks to be had. They specify "delivered," which under present conditions is a difficult specification.

W. A. Lusk, former newspaper man and late of the Cole company, is now one of the selling force of the Locomobile Co. of Missouri.

In a 1913 seven-passenger Cole touring car, owned by William H. Dobbs, L. Weaver drove last week from St. Louis to Allenton, 35 miles, in 1h. 15m. and returned in 1h. 20m. with no tire or other trouble.

C. P. Henderson, vice-president of the Regal Motor Car Co., was in St. Louis Saturday for a business visit with the Anselm-Ganahl Motor Car Co.

AMERICANS WILL TOUR AT HOME NEXT YEAR

"It is my guess that in 1915 many Americans who annually motor abroad will become much better acquainted with their country," commented President John A. Wilson of the American Automobile Association, when he landed in New York City the other day with a fortunate shipload of people who had escaped from the European war zone.

"Granted that we need many miles of real highway to get our road travelers to the scenic section of the country, we are improving our arteries of communication more substantially than is the case even in France, where its network of well-built roads will serve the country in the warfare now raging," continued the head of the automobile organization.

"But even the foresight of a Napoleon could not look ahead to the automobile age, and so it is that the surfaces of the most famous French highways have worn away under the stress of the multiplied traffic of the past few years, a percentage of which has been supplied by road tourists from other countries, and with the United States as the largest contributor. French highway experts are disagreed as to the best method of resurfacing, though it should be kept in mind that practically every French road has a base and is well drained.

"Great Britain has finally realized that there must be a more centralized control and carrying with it a positive provision for coherent direction of the trunk lines. Strange as it may seem, England has not followed France in a centralized control over a national system, but it has suffered from local control of portions of its most used roads. A per ten per mile basis is the only sure method of deciding upon the right kind of construction for picking out the main arteries connecting the various sections of a country. England's Road Board is recommending the establishment of a national system such as exists in France.

"While Germany has gone forward quite rapidly in roads progress, it has not equaled either France or Britain, though it does possess travelable roads connecting all parts of the empire. Motor vehicles will figure largely in the mobility of the armies now in the field, and in this particular France unquestionably has an advantage over the other continental countries.

SALESMAN MADE HAY AND SOLD A MOTOR CAR

Aladdin's lamp gave forth a weak and puny glare compared with the wonderful radiance and power of a Cole motor car when asked to perform a service, and a California rancher who afterward bought the machine declared he would rather own it than the wonderful oil-burning lamp. This is the way the Los Angeles dealer describes how it all happened:

"On Sunday nobody is supposed to work. That being the case, one of our salesmen decided to spend the day at the ranch of a friend, and, jumping into a Cole demonstrator, he drove to the ranch. When he arrived he was made welcome, but the ranch owner suggested that a team of horses also would have been welcome.

"Fifteen hundred tons of hay lay cut in the fields, and it looked like rain. The hay must be got under cover, and despite the large force of men at work it did not look possible to accomplish it. 'You don't need horses,' the salesman said. 'I have a stable full right under that hood.'

"He then hooked up the car to a rake, and with his friend manipulating the implement, the hay was raked at twice the speed made by the men driving horses. When the hay had been piled up it looked as if his task was done, as there was no extra wagon for the car to pull. The salesman decided, however, to do some hauling despite that fact, and filled the car with hay, leaving only enough room on the running board to drive the car.

"The machine did not carry as m[illegible] in several loads as the wagon did in one, but with the speed the car showed over the rough ground it did as much work as any one of the horse drawn wagons."

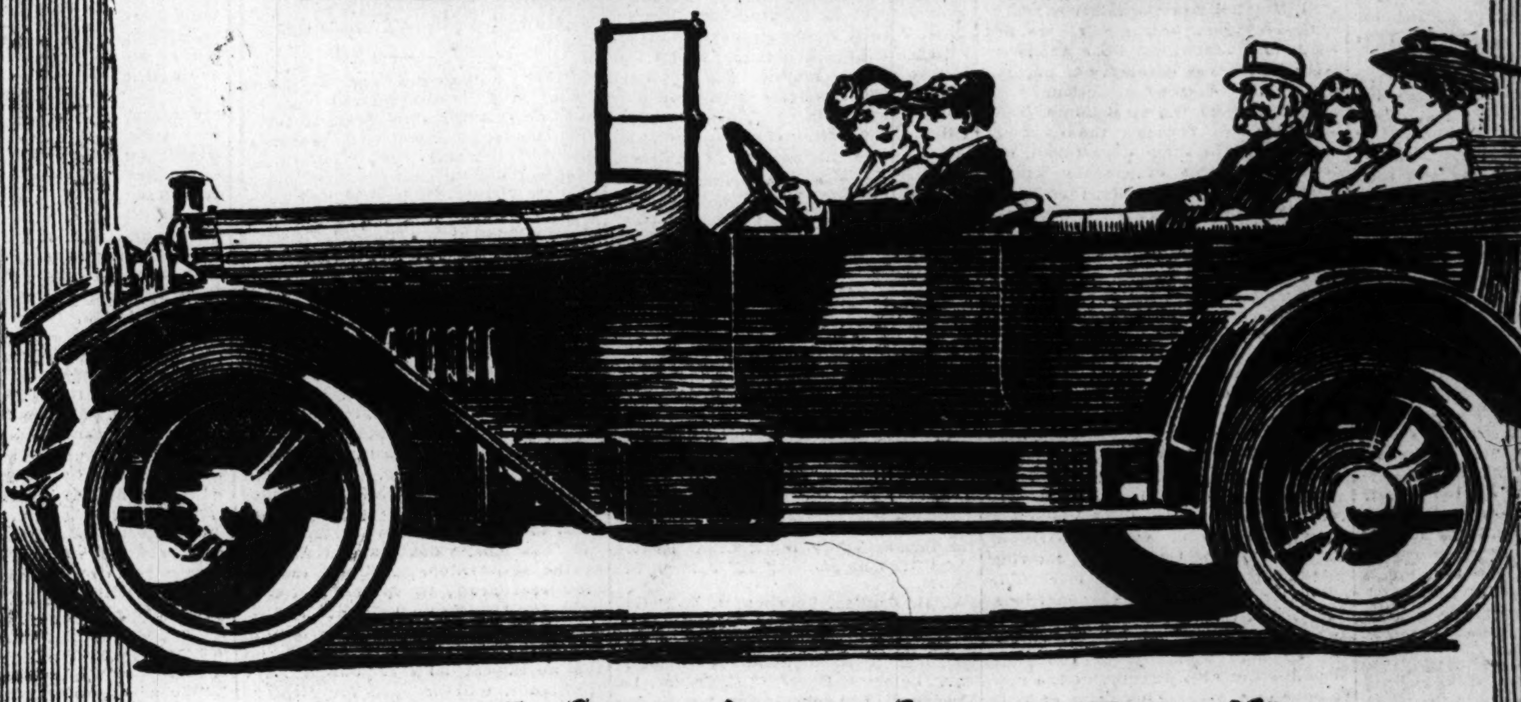
1915 Announcement
Hupmobile



Car of the American Family
$1200

For the third time the Hupp Motor Car Company has produced a car which, we believe, will prove immeasurably superior to any that assumes to compete with it.

The first Hupmobile 20 made for itself, and held against all rivalry, an immense following, at home and abroad.

The "32" put the Hupmobile into another class and surpassed the "20" in world-wide popularity.

This new Hupmobile bids fair to eclipse them both, as the very utmost a motorist can desire.

A highly specialized, individualized, Hupmobilized motor car which gives you, we believe, more service and comfort for your money than you can find if you comb the market a dozen times over.

Specifications

More Power
Motor, 3¼-inch bore x 5½-inch stroke; cylinders cast en bloc, with water jacket space between barrels; valves 1½-inch clear diameter, mushroom tappets, with special shape cams, very quiet; valve spring chamber closed by oil-tight cover, so that contacts are made in an oil bath. New shape combustion chamber, larger valves and larger cylinder bore produce more power. Multiple disc clutch, with thirteen 10-inch plates.

New Type Carburetor
Horizontal type bolted directly to cylinder block. Gas passage between cylinders, so that intake manifold is heated its entire length, assuring complete vaporization of even the heaviest gasoline.

Improved Oiling
A system already highly efficient made still better. Pressure feed from flywheel to main bearings and connecting rod bearings; cylinder walls lubricated by mist from crankshaft.

Modern Ignition
Ignition from storage battery, with automatic spark advance. Type rapidly being adopted by progressive engineers.

Single Unit Electrical System
Generator and starting motor combined, driven by silent chain from front end of crankshaft. Supplies current for starting, ignition and lighting. Makes motor non-stallable. Westinghouse 12-volt system.

Longer Wheelbase; More Room
Wheelbase, 119 inches; tires, 34 x 4 inches. Roomy 5-passenger body; 2 inches more leg-room in front, 7 inches more in tonneau; full tufted upholstery; concealed door hinges, flush handles. Front springs, 37 inches long, practically flat; rear springs, semi-elliptic, 52 inches long, swung under axle; springs self-oiling. Brakes, 14 inches in diameter.

Left Steer, Center Control

Non-Glare, Dimmer Headlights
Hupmobile design. Upper half of headlight glass corrugated. Kills reflector glare, complying with many city ordinances and giving full illumination on road. One bulb in headlights, dimmed at will through resistance in switch. No side-lamps.

Equipment and Other Details
16-gallon gasoline tank in cowl; rain-vision windshield, fixed uprights, lower half adjustable for ventilation. One-man type top, attaching to windshield. Crowned fenders, with flat edge and without beading. Tail lamp exclusive Hupmobile design. Illuminates license plate and entire width of road for considerable distance behind car. Non-skid tires on rear. Demountable rims, carrier at rear for spare rim and tire. Lighting and ignition switches controlled by Yale locks. Speedometer. Robe rail, foot rail and cocoa mat in tonneau. Color, blue-black with maroon running gear. Price F. O. B. Detroit.

Listen to the details!

Every Improvement Important

Ease, convenience and economy of operation are furthered by:

Larger steering wheel
Easier steering
Easier clutch action
Throttle and carburetor control levers on steering wheel
Automatic spark advance
New starter that makes motor non-stallable
Foot throttle in improved position
Larger brakes
Swiveled pads on foot pedals
Lighting and ignition switches at center of cowl board
Non-skid tires on rear
More power
Larger valves
Heated intake passage
Improved carburetion
Improved ignition
Improved motor lubrication
One-man type top

The passengers are afforded greater ease and comfort by:

A larger body
Ample room for five passengers
Deeper seats, with same comfortable Hupmobile tilt
Larger wheels and tires
Semi-elliptic rear springs
Deeper, softer, full-tufted upholstery
More leg-room in front and in tonneau
Longer wheelbase
Wider doors
Side curtains to swing with doors

Model 32 $1050
With electric starter and lights, over-size tires, demountable rims, tire carrier at rear and all regular equipment
$950 with regular equipment only. Prices f. o. b. Detroit

This new Hupmobile simply declines to be classed with anything of like price—in externals, in performance, in economy.

You can't compare it, because nothing near it in price will bear comparison.

If you've had Hupmobile experience, go see the new car, expecting to find all the good points you have known, and a wealth of added value.

If you know the Hupmobile only by reputation, you will find that the new car goes far beyond the best you have ever heard of former models.

SEES BOOM ABROAD FOR AMERICAN MADE MOTOR CARS

Big Manufacturer, Marooned in London, Says Foreign Plants Are All Shut Down.

That the European war will act as a positive boost to American business in general and the automobile industry in particular is the opinion of John N. Willys, president of the Willys-Overland Company, who expresses his views in a cablegram from London, England. For two months Mr. Willys has been making a study of conditions in Europe at close range, and is thoroughly in touch with the situation both at home and abroad.

"The English are not slow to see the great opportunities for trade extension given to the United States by recent events," wires Mr. Willys. "Sir George Parish, England's foremost financial writer, declares that the war will bring great wealth to American industries and an economic benefit to the people of the United States. He prophesies that Americans will be able to sell their crops at prices which will give them a much larger income than could possibly be realized had there been no war or danger.

"The call for army reserves throughout Europe has completely demoralized the industries on this side of the Atlantic. Many of the largest automobile factories have practically been unmanned. Only a very small number of automobiles will be built in Europe until there is a cessation of hostilities and the warlike atmosphere has cleared.

"In the meanwhile the entire field will be open to the American motor car manufacturers. There may be some difficulty in shipping cars to European ports, as they may be declared contraband goods, but the rest of the civilized world will be free from European competition and is America's for the taking. And once the people who have heretofore bought automobiles of foreign manufacture discover the superiority of American cars, Europe will never regain the field she has lost.

SAFETY FIRST CAR TO TOUR UNITED STATES

Pursuing its aggressive campaign for greater safety in motoring, and general use of the public highways, the Safety First Society of New York has hit upon a decidedly original and unique idea. This is to be a nation-wide touring campaign, with an automobile equipped with reliable devices, which tend to make motoring safe.

Within the next 10 days this car will be started on an extended tour of the Eastern States, and later continue on through the South and far West. It will carry representatives of the Safety First Society, who will use unique methods of preaching the gospel of caution and carry the message of "Safety First" to motorists and other users of the highways along the entire route.

The members of the expedition will call on city officials and prominent citizens in each city visited, with the object of inspiring interest and closer cooperation in the cause. In many cases aid and suggestions will be offered by the Society's representatives to communities that are interested in co-operating by forming local Safety First societies.

Suggestions as to traffic regulations, the eight-foot rule in passing trolley cars, uniformity of speed laws, muffler cut-out ordinances, street cars dimming headlights when approaching automobiles and automobilists doing likewise when passing other automobiles, and other precautionary regulations now enforced in numerous cities, will be advocated.

Lectures will be delivered by the society's representatives and as the tour will be given wide publicity, it is hoped that it will directly result in more intense interest in the great national campaign to curb recklessness and to minimize the number of preventable automobile accidents and fatalities.

Such cities as New York, Boston, Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo, Chicago, Toledo and St. Louis have perfected Safety First organizations and many more cities are expected to promote similar bodies.

States to be covered by the tour include New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, North Dakota, South Dakota, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Washington, D. C., and later into the Northwest and Pacific Coast.

MADE LONG DRIVE IN TWENTY-THREE DAYS

From Santa Anna, Cal., to Bellecenter, O., in 23 days is the record made by a Cole motor car owner from the Pacific coast. Joseph Krock and his son made the 2957-mile trip without any trouble save the change of two rear tires and an inner front tube. The other front tire carries California air. The party started over the Sunset route, but picked up the Lincoln highway route and followed the signs into Richmond, Ind.

Mr. Krock asserts the roads are very well marked and that little trouble was experienced in following the proper trail. The most severe part of the journey was the desert drive, where the two rear tires were worn out. The tourists have notified the Cole factory that the car gave perfect service and that they look forward to the return journey with a great deal of pleasure.

SHOW THE NEW PACKARD

The first of the new Packard "3—38" was placed on exhibition in the handsome salesroom of the Halsey Automobile Co. last week.

This car, of the imperial limousine type, is the one of some ten or more inclosed cars the Halsey company already has on order for fall delivery to residents of St. Louis. Its Brewster green paint is wonderfully well set off by the brass plating of exposed metal parts, and a small gold strip on the door panels, with the gold monogram, harmonize with the beautiful natural wood wheels, making the car most distinctive.

"In the next month we are going to give St. Louisans the finest exhibition of inclosed cars ever shown, outside the factory," said R. L. McCrea, sales manager.

"The salesroom in our new building easily provides space for ten or twelve cars and we have on order for fall delivery fully that many distinct types, practically every one different in paint and upholstery. Many of our customers have granted us permission to show their cars.

FIRST 1915 HUPMOBILE RECEIVED IN ST. LOUIS

With the shipment of the first 1915 Hupmobiles last week, manufacturing operations on the new models started with a rush at the Detroit factory of the Hupp Motor Car Co. in the past week.

Sales officials declare that the 1915 season is a full month ahead of previous years in point of activity.

"One of the unusual features of Hupp business this month is the great number of dealers calling for immediate delivery of cars," says Commercial Manager F. A. Harris.

This is chiefly due, of course, to the fact that the Hupmobile, while embodying all the time-tried Hupp characteristics has added entirely new elements of attractiveness, which have a strong appeal to the large and loyal Hubmobile following.

The Weber Implement and Auto Co., Nineteenth and Locust streets, is showing the new and larger 1915 Hupmobile.

Tires at Before-War Prices

Yet We Never Got Choicer Rubber
We Never Built Better Tires

There exists now a new reason—most compelling—for buying Goodyear Tires. It results from war conditions.

These leading tires—built of extra-fine rubber, in the same way as always—are selling today at June prices.

Due to Quick Action

Early in August—when war began—the world's rubber markets seemed suddenly closed to us. Rubber prices doubled almost over night.

Men could see no way to pay for rubber abroad, and no way to bring it in. We, like others—in that panic—were forced to higher prices. But we have since gone back to prices we charged before the war and this is how we did it:

We had men in London and Singapore when the war broke out. The larger part of the world's rubber supply comes through there. We cabled them to buy up the pick of the rubber. They bought—before the advance—1,500,000 pounds of the finest rubber there.

Nearly all this is now on the way to us. And it means practically all of the extra-grade rubber obtainable abroad.

Today we have our own men in Colombo, Singapore and Para. Those are the world's chief sources of rubber. So we are pretty well assured of a constant supply, and our pick of the best that's produced.

We were first on the ground. We were quickest in action. As a result, we shall soon have in storage an almost record supply of this extra grade of rubber.

And we paid about June prices.

Now Inferior Grades Cost Double

About the only crude rubber available now for many makers is inferior. In ordinary times, the best tire makers refuse it. Much of it has been rejected. But that "off rubber" now sells for much more than we paid for the best.

The results are these:

Tire prices in general are far in advance of Goodyears. And many tire makers, short of supplies, will be forced to use second-grade rubber.

Be Careful Now

In Goodyears we pledge you the same grade tire as always. And that grade won for Goodyears the top place in Tiredom—the largest sale in the world.

And, for the time being, our prices are the same as before the war. We shall try to keep them there.

We accept no excessive orders, but dealers will be kept supplied. And we charge them, until further notice, only ante-bellum prices.

That means that Goodyears—the best tires built—are selling way below other tires.

VEDRINES MAKES AIR RAID WITH A NEW APPARATUS

Paris Newspaper Says More Will Be Heard of This Feat Later.

PARIS, Aug. 29.—The value of aeroplanes in scouting work is a subject of discussion among technical observers.

"Our military aviators are rendering invaluable services," says the Temps, quoting an authority on aviation, whose name is omitted for military reasons. The paper continue:

"Our aerial forces are infinitely superior to those of Germany. Besides, some hundreds of military aviators and all our best civilian airmen are in the service. Brindejoc des Moulinais, Roland Garros, Eugene Gilbert and Jules Vedrines are all at the front. Vedrines has just completed a raid with an apparatus of extraordinary power. Something more will be heard of this later.

"The experience of our aviators shows that an aeroplane is safe from bullets when 1000 yards high and at 2000 yards an aviator still can observe accurately with the naked eye. As our flyers can guide a machine with one hand and use glasses with the other, the masses of the enemy cannot escape observation.

"The most difficult thing is to determine commands by discriminating among the uniforms. One danger to the French airmen is from our own soldiers, who have not learned to distinguish our aeroplanes from those of the enemy. I would suggest that we do not fire upon air craft at all unless absolutely sure that we know their identity."

The Journel de Maine-et-Loire at Angiers publishes a letter from one of the French frontier fortresses, in which the writer complains of the loneliness of the life there. It would seem that the sport of the garrison is to watch for German aeroplanes and fire upon them. Three German airships are said to have been brought down while the aviaters were throwing bombs.

Mayor and 500 City Officials and Employes Are Sworn Into Office Under New Charter

Mayor Kiel took the oath of office under the new charter in his private office in the city hall at 11 a. m., yesterday, and nearly 500 other officials and employes of the city were sworn in during the remainder of the day in City Register Witter's office.

Witter went to the Mayor's office promptly at 11 o'clock. The Mayor had been waiting for a few minutes, and jokingly told a few friends who had called that he had been out of a job since midnight and that if they wanted to "jump on him" about anything, that was a good time.

After the oath was administered the Mayor donned a new derby hat, which he said he had purchased a few days ago, but had decided not to wear until he was Mayor under the new charter.

The first officials to take their oaths were Register Witter, his deputy, Richard C. Rombauer, and his chief clerk, William C. Van Pelt, upon whom rests the duty of administering oaths to all others. They took their oaths before Frederick Landsberg, a notary public in the law department.

Members of the new Board of Public Service took the oath under their old positions yesterday. They will be appointed to their new positions Monday and will take the oatn a second time. They are Street Commissioner Talbert, who will be Director of Streets and Sewers; Sewer Commissioner Hooke, who will be Director of Public Utilities, and Fire Chief Swingley, who will be Director of Public Safety. President Kinsey of the Board of Public Improvements, took the oath for that office, to which he automatically succeeds under the new charter.

Under the charter the oath must be administered to every official and employe who receives an annual salary. Many men in minor positions, such as jail guards, are required to be sworn because the ordinances creating their positions put their salary on an annual basis, while many high-salaried officials are not required to be sworn because the ordinances fix their salaries on a monthly basis.

The oath requires that the person being sworn has all the qualifications for his office, that he has none of the disqualifications mentioned in the charter, that he will support the Constitutions of the United States and the State and the charter and ordinances of the city, and "be influenced only by considerations of fitness in the appointment, promotion, demotion or discharge of officers and employes and will not expend money otherwise than for adequate consideration and efficient service to the city."

Deputy Register Rombauer visited the jail and workhouse and administered oaths to the guards, who could not be spared from their duties to go to the city hall.

Nearly all the members of the City Council and House of Delegates visited the Register's office to take the oath yesterday.

MRS. BLANK'S PERSONAL PROPERTY VALUE $5344.72

Brewery Stock Share Listed by Estate at $500 Said to Be Worth $50,000.

An inventory of the estate of Mrs. Louise A. Blank, who before her marriage to Joseph A. Blank was the widow of Adolph Anheuser, one of the stockholders of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, shows personal property, the par value of which is $5344.72. This includes one share of stock in the Anheuser-Busch corporation, the par value of which is $500. The inventory was made by Mrs. Blank's son, Eberhard Anheuser, as administrator of the estate.

While there is no Anheuser-Busch brewing stock on the market, it has been conjectured stock in this company is worth about $50,000 a share.

Mrs. Blank died in June at her home, 3131 Russell avenue. She did not leave a will and her son qualified as administrator at the request of the other heirs, including her husband and her daughters, Mrs. Dewey Hickey, Misses Nellie, Lillie and Edmee Anheuser. At the same time it was stated in court the estate was worth $20,500.

What he had to sell: An automobile, a motor cycle, a summer cottage, a Morris chair. And he sold them through the Post-Dispatch Want Ad columns.

M'REYNOLDS' NOMINATION CONFIRMED BY SENATE

Four Republicans, One Progressive and One Democrat Vote Against Him.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—The nomination of Attorney-General McReynolds to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court was confirmed today by the Senate by a vote of 44 to 6.

Senator Norris of Nebraska made the principal speech in opposition to him. Four Republicans—Norris, Cummins, Clapp and Jones—one Progressive—Poindexter—and one Democrat—Vardaman—voted against confirming the nomination.

The Senate also confirmed the nomination of Thomas W. Gregory of Texas to be Attorney-General.

CHILD'S FOOT SEVERED BENEATH STREET CAR

While playing in the street in front of 1304 North Twelfth street, at 2 p. m. yesterday, Stanley Rukowski, 2 years old, of 1201 O'Fallon street fell and his right foot was caught under the wheels of a southbound McKinley car and severed at the ankle.

A witness said the child was running about the street and slipped just as the car approached. The accident was declared unavoidable and no arrests were made.

SNOW AND HAIL DAMAGE APPLE CROP IN COLORADO

Storm on Western Slope Knocks Fruit From Heavily Loaded Trees.

DENVER, Colo., Aug. 29.—Colorado's first snow of the season, descending last night on the western slope, caused heavy damage to the apple crop, according to reports. A large acreage of land in the section visited by the storm is devoted to apples. Growers this year were looking for record-breaking crops.

At Eagle and other towns in that section the crops are said to be virtually ruined. The snow was accompanied by hail which knocked ripening fruit off the trees.

DIED AFTER COLD PLUNGE

Contents of Woman's Stomach to Be Analyzed.

The contents of the stomach of Mrs. Elenor Burns of 3834 Delmar boulevard, who died suddenly Friday night, will be sent to the City Chemist for analysis, following a post mortem examination made yesterday by Dr. Louis H. Brandenberger.

Mrs. Burns' death occurred shortly after she had taken a cold plunge, and, as acute congestion of the stomach was found, it is thought the plunge caused death. Mrs. Burns had been given a gargle for throat trouble early in the day by Dr. J. J. Kane of 1117 North Grand avenue, who said the medicine was a harmless preparation of glycerin and listerine.

NOSTALGIA IN CONGRESS

House Sergeant-at-Arms Investigates Plea of "Sickness.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—When homesickness becomes a bona fide ailment, incapacitating a legislator to a point where he is unable to attend to his duties, is a problem confronting Sergeant-at-Arms Gordon of the Houes of Representatives.

Representative Burke of Wiconsin, one of the healthiest looking men in the House, has been attending to congressional duties in Washington for 18 months, without a vacation and he would like to get away.

"Are you sick?" he was asked.

"Yes," he replied. "I have nostalgia. I'm very homesick."

Thereupon the sergeant-at-arms, fearing an epidemic, began an investigation.

RACE HATRED, ENVY, REVENGE BACK OF WAR, PRELATE SAYS

Archbishop Glennon, Home From Abroad, Discusses Conflict in Europe.

PAPACY NOW NEUTRAL

Vatican Likely to Be Against Italian Government if It Should Fight Austria.

In the opinion of Archbishop John J. Glennon, who returned last night from a visit to Europe, where he was the last American prelate to be received by Pope Pius X, the present European war seems to mean that 2000 years of European civilization has gone up in smoke.

In the Archbishop's characteristically pithy style, he declared the war between Russia and Austria and Germany was a war between the Slavic and Teutonic races; that the war between Germany and France was a war of revenge; that the war between England and Germany was a war of commerce.

"And what about Japan?" he was asked.

"Japan's attitude," remarked the prelate, as a ghost of a smile flitted across his face, "reminds me of the old story of an Irishman who came across two men fighting. After watching them with great interest for awhile, the Irishman tapped one of the combatants on the shoulder and said: 'Say, is this a private fight or is there a chance for me to cut in?'"

The Archbishop declared that no religious antagonisms were primarily involved. Although there is some feeling between the Greek Catholics of Russia and the Roman Catholic of Austria, he doesn't think this has been an important factor. He pointed out that while Belgium and the people of France are strongly Catholic, England and Germany have many Protestants.

Situation Beyond Control.

"In the Middle Ages," he said, "the Pope might have prevented such a conflict, but now the Catholic Church has the power neither to start nor stop such a conflict. The situation simply got beyond anybody's control."

The Archbishop said it must be borne in mind that there is no real democracy in Europe. All its governments, in the last analysis, are given over to the military authorities. But while he did not think the Pope could effectually intervene, he declared that at present the papacy is the only moral force of neutral character remaining Europe.

Europeans, he added, think the people of the United States are all right so long as their money lasts but they do not want any of our advice. Americans should be deeply grateful, he thinks, that we have no entangling alliances with the belligerent Powers. He thinks we could even afford to put up with scant courtesy, if necessary.

He did not believe that the war would materially influence the college of Cardinals in their selection of a new Pope. The Archbishop remarked that there was now no civil government with the power to veto a papal selection. Asked what might be the effect on the coming election if Italy should declare war on Austria, he said that, under present conditions, the Vatican would be more likely to be against the Italian Government than for it.

Tells of Audience With Pope.

Speculation as to the identity of the successor of Pius X, the Archbishop thinks, is rather idle. A two-thirds vote of the Cardinals is necessary to a choice and there are no advance caucuses. The proceedings are always secret. The Archbishop declared that a layman would be just as able to make predictions as he himself would.

The Archbishop gave a detailed account of his last interview with Pope Pius H. He arrived at Rome July 16 and, three days later, had an appointment for an audience. He had not seen the primate in six years and looked forward with great interest to his visit.

After he had mounted the 80 steps of the scala regie, or royal staircase, he passed through five audience chambers and came to a pause before another cabinet in which His Holiness was seated at a desk. The Pontiff looked up with a smile and, with a gesture, said "Come!" He went inside and, after a cordial invitation to be seated, they conversed in Latin. Pope Pius did not know any English and although the Archbishop knows Italian they found it easier to get along in the more ancient tongue.

The Archbishop says he was at once impressed with the changed physical conditon of the Pope. He had aged greatly in the six years since the St. Louisan's last visit, and his skin had taken on something of the lividness of extreme age. Even so, Archbishop Glennon found the Pope much better in physical appearance than he had been led to expect because of frequent and alarming rumors about his health.

"'What's the news?' was the first thing he asked me," the Archbishop said. "I told him I brought him good news and then said I was glad to see him looking so well. 'I'm not so good,' he replied. 'I'm getting very old; I am now 80.' To this I answered: 'Well, the span of life is lengthening; that's not so old.'"

Message to St. Louis Archdiocese.

After that, according to the Archbishop, they got down to business. Pope Pius took great interest in photographs of the new St. Louis Cathedral and in plans for the new seminary for priests. He remembered a big photograph the Archbishop had sent him showing him the immense crowd at the cathedral cornerstone laying. He expressed his approval of the progress that had been made. Before the interview terminated the Pope sent a message to his people of this archdiocese.

"I want through you to send my good wishes and blessings to the faithful of St. Louis," Archbishop Glennon quoted him. "I'd like to have them expressed in every church."

Because the ship he returned on did not send or receive wireless messages on the voyage, the Archbishop did not learn of the Pope's death until he arrived in New York. He believes that the shock and grief of the war hastened the end more than the bronchitis. He characterized the Pope as a man of exceptional sensitiveness and tenderness of heart and thinks that the war must have been a sad blow to him.

From Rome the Archbishop went to England. He was there when John Redmond, the Irish Home Rule leader, announced to the Government that the Irish Nationalists would support the administration in the war. The Archbishop characterized Redmond's action as a master stroke and declared he believed England, in the circumstances, no longer could deny home rule to Ireland.

Liner Badly Crowded.

The Archbishop had planned to come to America on the Aquitania. The British Government seized the vessel, tore out its palatial staterooms and made it a transport ship for army horses. The Aquitania's passengers had to take the Campania, which, the Archbishop said, was badly overcrowded. Each stateroom had three or four occupants, and husbands and wives were in many cases separated for the voyage so that the staterooms could be divided equitably between men and women. One man, he learned, paid $1400 for passage across, and many others paid exorbitant sums.

When the vessel was a day out of Liverpool, the British warship Essex overtook it and escorted it for some time. The ship was not lighted at night and many passengers, particularly women, were very much alarmed. The Archbishop was asked about a New York rumor that he had done much to calm these fears. He said he knew nothing about that.

The Archbishop declined to say whether he had brought back any new appointments or dignities from Rome.

POLICE CAN'T FIND MAN HURT BY ELECTRIC CAR

After Being Thrown From Buggy He Was Carried Away in a Wagon.

The police last night reported that they had been unable to find trace of John Whalen, 26 years old, of 2749 North Garrison avenue, after he was injured when an electric railway work car struck a buggy in which he was riding yesterday morning, and he was placed in a delivery wagon to be taken to a doctor.

Whalen and Thomas Collins of 1617 North Sixteenth street were driving north on Glasgow avenue, when the car struck their buggy at Benton street. The buggy was demolished and the men were thrown out. Collins was not injured, but Whalen suffered injuries, the extent of which the police were not able to learn.

The police were informed that a delivery wagon of the Krey Packing Co. was at the scene of the accident, and Whalen was placed in it to be taken to a doctor. The police visited his home last night to get a report of the accident, but were informed that he had not been there. They called several hospitals by telephone, but were unable to find him.

Former St. Louisans Death Accidental.

MONTGOMERY CITY, Mo., Aug. 29.—The Coroner's jury, after investigating the death of Julius Meyer, formerly of St. Louis, later of Middletown, returned a verdict of accidental killing. The body was found by the Burlington Railroad, near Buel, this county, with skull and shoulders crushed. Meyer was a merchant at Middletown.

NEW YORK PAGEANT FOR 300 YEARS' PROGRESS

Central Park the Stage for the Commercial Tercentenary Celebration.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—With the children of recreation centers and playgrounds of Manhattan as the actors, and the great sheep meadow and the lakes of Central Park as the stage, 300 years of New York's commercial, industrial and educational progress were shown today in one of the most remarkable pageants in the city's history.

The festival carried out the idea of the late William J. Gaynor, who, as Mayor of New York, appointed the New York Commercial Tercentenary Commission to celebrate the three hundredth anniversary of the commerce of the city.

MULE'S ALIBI FREES MAN

Feudist Proves Assassins Did Not Escape on Animal.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Aug. 29.—"Red Tom" Davidson, Breathitt County feudist, was acquitted at Winchester tonight in his third trial on a charge of conspiracy to assassinate Ed Callahan. Davidson was alleged to have furnished the mule on which the assassins rode from the scene of the murder.

Davidson proved an alibi for the mule.

Thirteen other cases were continued indefinitely, the Judge warning the defendants that at the first hint of feud trouble all would be arrested. They are mostly boys and promised to stop feudism.

Vacation-less Club Now Closing!
It's Your Chance—Join Tomorrow!

Diamonds, Watches, Jewelry at Special Prices and Terms to Club Members COSTS YOU NOTHING TO JOIN

After a wonderfully successful career, the close of the "Vacation-less Club" draws near, so it's up to those who wish to profit by the benefits the Club offers to act without delay. The specials we present here are chosen with unusual care. They are on sale Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday only. To appreciate the real values you'll have to come in and see the merchandise. Might as well come TOMORROW. The purpose of the Club is, first, to impress upon every one the desirability of owning a genuine Diamond; second, to set forth the advantages of "spending your vacation" at home—in St. Louis—where the price of a trolley ride takes you out into the country to attractive groves along river banks; or you can visit country clubs, parks and summer gardens and take occasional rides on our river steamers. Then why spend your money in expensive travel, and in the end wish you were back in your comfortable home? Just the price of a railroad ticket would, in many instances, pay for a fine Diamond or Watch.

INSURANCE—All payments cancelled should a Club Member die while paying. Your family will receive a receipt in full. Do not hesitate. Join today. Money refunded if not satisfied.

ENTRAL PARKWAY WOULD ENHANCE REALTY VALUES

ohn H. Gundlach Says Plan Successfully Carried Out Would Add to Beauty of City and Benefit Property Owners.

GREAT WHITE WAY FOR CENTER OF CITY

posed Assessment for Civic Improvement Applies to District Between Cass Avenue and Broadway and Would Enhance Values.

By BERRY MOORE.

ohn H. Gundlach, president of the hn H. Gundlach Real Estate Co. and rmer President of the City Coun- , declared yesterday that the suc- ssful issue of the central park- y plan would work a decided im- vement in realty and building nditions in St. Louis, and would sure the upbuilding of Chestnut reet or Market street.

The demand for houses alone, in- dent to the vacation of the north de of Market and the south side Chestnut street, which would be bsorbed by the project, would mean tenant for every vacant house in e central district, according to undlach. The demand would be upplemented, he says, as the result f the exodus of tenants from the outh and the north sides or Market r Chestnut street, which would be- ome too valuable for residential purposes.

Chestnut or Market street would become a center for shops of all kinds and for salesrooms for automobiles and accessories.

The Adolphus Hotel, which will rise 20 stories at the east end of the parkway, will form the nucleus of he new center.

The rebuilding of the street on n attractive scale, especially the ection between Jefferson avenue and Twelfth street, which he declares would become the great white way of the city, is foreseen.

As proposed by the City Plan Commission, of which Walter B. Stevens secretary, the project will extend rom Twelfth street to Grand avenue and will necessitate the condemning of 21 city blocks.

From Twelfth street to Jefferson avenue the parkway, which will include three driveways, with park trimmings, will be between Chestnut and Market streets, it being overlooked respectively by these thoroughfares from the north and from the south.

Incidentally the north side of Chestnut street will become the north side of Market street, and vice versa.

The outer driveways will be opened for heavy traffic, while the central one, will be restricted to automobiles or pleasure vehicles.

From Jefferson to Grand the plan contemplates only two driveways, with park effects between and on the sides.

Plaza for Union Station.

A feature of the Central Parkway will be a plaza in front of Union Station, which probably will be embellished with fountains and statuary.

The enhancement in land values on Chestnut or Market street, it is believed, will be unprecedented, and will extend to the streets both north and south. The property on the north side of Market street and on the north side of Chestnut street, which will be occupied by the parkway, is only 72½ feet in depth, and therefore is not so valuable as that on the north side, with a depth of 109 feet. On both sides of Chestnut street the improvements, which are old and out of date, are of nominal value, in many instances not paying carrying charges of the property.

The district to be assessed for this big civic improvement, according to city officials, probably will extend as far north as Cass avenue, and as far east as Broadway. As the public and property owners as a whole will reap the pleasures and material benefits of the project, the assessment, the concensus of opinion is, should be general.

C. M. McDonald, secretary of the St Louis Real Estate Exchange, and president of the C. M. McDonald Real Estate Co., reports renewed demand for property on Chestnut street and Market street on the part of both speculators and investors, the impetus Chestnut or Market street will receive as the result of the Central Parkway, and Busch Hotel projects being already discounted. Prices on these streets, which are relatively lower than those of otne: sections east of Eighteenth street, involve great speculative and investment opportunities.

he vacant block bounded by Chest- Pine, Seventeenth and Eighteenth ets, has been challenging notable attention. As it would command the plaza in front of the Union Station, it would be a superb site for a large hotel or amusement place.

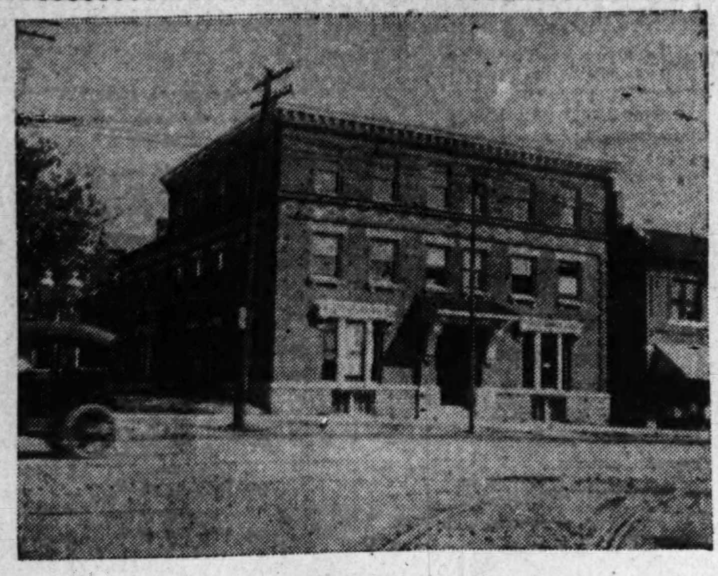
$30,000 Hospital Erected by the Christian Church



The capacious three-story hospital building at Grand avenue and Palm street has been purchased for $30,000 by the Board of Benevolence of the Christian Church and will be opened about Sept. 12 as the Christian Hospital. Dr. J. C. Heinrichs is president of the staff, Dr. A. E. Meisenbach vice-president, and Dr. T. R. Ayars secretary and treasurer.

Extensive alterations and decorations are nearly completed. The building, which was erected for hospital purposes, is modern in every respect, and will have a capacity of 50 beds. It is one block from Fairground, is across the street from the New Lindell Theater, and is two blocks from the site of the North End branch of the Y. M. C. A.

A free clinic for the poor will be run in connection with the hospital and a training school for nurses will be conducted.

The medical and surgical staff has been partially selected. Those thus far appointed are: Ophthalmology, Dr. J. C. Heinrichs, Dr. E. J. Norris; surgery, Dr. A. E. Meisenbach, Dr. L. A. Milliken; medicine, Dr. S. A. Van Hoefen; obstetrics, Dr. T. R. Ayars, Dr. L. C. Stocking; gynecology, Dr. D. R. Parman, Dr. F. C. Esselbruegge; proctology, Dr. M. J. Kallenbach; Roentgenology, Dr. A. E. Belton.

ST. LOUIS REALTY IS ACTIVE AND SOUND IN SPITE OF WAR

Optimism Is Keynote of Review by James D. Dockery of Conditions of Market and Changes That Will Occur in City's Development.

James D. Dockery, of the real estate firm of John Dockery & Son, who is an expert on realty values and business conditions, gave the Post-Dispatch yesterday an interview reviewing the local situation, which will be read with much interest, as the opening of the fall season approaches. He takes an optimistic view of realty and building prospects.

"War, with its devastation, pervades every atmosphere, and reflects with emphasis its deleterious influence in this country," said Mr. Dockery.

"With the stock exchanges of the world closed and business generally conducted with suppression, no more crucial test could be applied to the real estate market here than the events of the past 30 days.

"Notwithstanding this situation, coming as it does after a prolonged period of dullness in the business world generally, the St. Louis real estate market has shown surprising strength and activity.

"In particular is this true of the loan market. Choice offerings are accepted almost immediately at no increase in interest rates. No better criterion of the high estimate held for this form of investment could be wished for. The future of any city is no more thoroughly weighed by any class than the loaner on the security of its real estate.

Realty Loans Pay Well.

"The remuneration from loans on real estate is ample, and the security of the principal sum involved is unsurpassed.

"Founded on the prime and sound principle of basic worth, the investor in real estate loans is not subjected to the vicarious behavior of the uncertain "ticker" that may wipe out overnight a large part, if not all, of his security.

"It is admitted that the precarious conduct of the stock market in recent years has had the effect of awakening a realization of the safety and strength which characterize real estate loans.

"Holders of investment property in this city have learned that their returns are certain and sure and that they have no such anxiety for their principal invested as prevails among holders of many other classes of security.

"Hence it is that we find no disposition on the part of property owners to dispose of their holdings unless at a reasonable compensation.

"It is true, of course, that the law of supply and demand applies with equal force to all classes of commodities, but none the less regulates the increment and production of real estate as well as any other form of investment. It is doubtless true that in periods of dullness the revenue from real estate investments is curtailed as in any field, but there is a vast difference between no dividend whatever, very prevalent recently in certain well known stocks and some bonds, and a reduction in rent.

"Where rentals are originally reasonable and not based on fictitious grounds the fluctuation is always slight.

Downtown Section Is Active.

"Downtown St. Louis is at the present time preparing itself for an unprecedented activity, which needs but the adjustment of larger affairs to burst forth in its full vigor. Quietly enough there has been a steady improvement proceeding in this district, and competent judges predict for that area between Market and Washington avenue, Broadway to Twelfth street, a startling metamorphosis in the very near future.

"Within these bounds, we have the model warehouse structure of the Rice-Stix Dry Goods Co., rapidly nearing completion, and the improvements shortly to be made by the Union Electric will change the aspect of Ninth and Tenth streets, as well as St. Charles street.

"Within a stone's throw is found the excellent new Majestic making its debut in hotel life and this structure, to accompany the new Laclede Gas Light building, will exert an excellent effect on Eleventh street.

"But a short block west at Twelfth street, the contemplated Busch hostelry will enliven that broad thoroughfare.

"Chestnut street cannot but attract the attention of the serious observer of St. Louis real estate. Admirably situated in the direct line of traffic from Union Station on the west and the City Hall and Municipal Courts buildings, Fourteenth to Twelfth streets, and fed by the Courthouse and Planters' Hotel on the east, she draws her concourse as well from the several splendid office structures at Sixth, Seventh and Eighth streets.

"The demolition of the old City Hall, which must shortly transpire, will clear the way up to Twelfth street. From Twelfth street on, Chestnut street is in the center of much improvement in the making. Under the new charter which yesterday assumed our guardianship, one of the principal improvements contemplated is a grand parkway to Grand avenue, between Market and Chestnut streets.

Street Will Be Transformed.

"This means an impetus which gauged by similar conditions in other cities, under like circumstances, will completely transform the north side of Chestnut street.

"Truly it would seem that at the prevailing prices on this thoroughfare in comparison with the vast increase asked on adjoining streets, Chestnut street, is one of opportunity for the investor.

"It is to be noted in this connection that traffic along the cross streets from Chestnut street south, east of Twelfth street has increased remarkably in recent years.

"Where but a short while since there was little if any attraction south of Chestnut street in this district, there has been much activity lately.

"Sixth street looms up in this respect with such splendor as to require but passing comment, while Seventh street has kept well apace and exhibits much life in this vicinity.

"Eighth street has its quota of buildings south of Market street and Ninth street, with its Printers' Block and other buildings, contributes an ever-increasing walking traffic.

Traffic Follows Building.

"All of these arteries are exerting a splendid influence and the ebb and flow of human tide, it would seem, should be most felt at Chestnut street. To the north, Olive and Pine have their own traffic, and to the south Market street should not attract the pedestrian in the same degree as Chestnut.

"The new viaduct on Twelfth street and the expansion of this artery south should bring to Chestnut street much benefit in the near future.

"Upon consideration, Chestnut street downtown is a natural pathway for vehicle traffic, being, as it is, the only thoroughfare of prominence which is free of street car traffic.

"A general survey of the real estate market in St. Louis shows a gratifying condition and emphasizes its stability and adaptability under any condition of affairs.

"True it is that affairs of magnitude must temporarily wait, in times of great stress, but the underlying demand for good properties is all that can be expected.

"But recently the last steps in connection with the cutway from Locust to Lindell, Leonard to Channing avenues, have been taken and new energy injected into this particular locality.

Locust Street Will Advance.

"Locust street, the home of the automobile, and Olive in the vicinity of this cut, as well as Lindell boulevard, will shortly, it is confidently predicted, display marked prominence.

"Grand avenue continues to hold its excellent record of activity and improvement, and this great central artery displays all and more than has been predicted. In the near future from Olive street, north and south, close observers of this thoroughfare, forecast an unprecedented betterment.

"The demand for homes in the choice parts of the West End, is very satisfactory and upholds the enviable reputation of St. Louis as a world-renowned home city.

"The small investor in real estate in recent years who has procured a flat of three rooms and bath has found that no more staple and remunerative property may be obtained. There are practically no vacancies in this class of property and the demand continues unabated.

"Within the past year the South Side has exhibited more activity in building than any other particular locality.

"West of Grand avenue in the Shaw tract district, block after block of high class apartments and dwellings have been erected.

"The locality is choice and convenient and appeals readily to the home searcher.

"Considerable trading of properties has been going on in recent years, and has been the means of building up certain localities that but a short while back were entirely vacant.

"St. Louis behaves splendidly in the face of extraordinary crises, and with the ending of wars abroad, 'a consummation devoutly to be wished,' real estate here will be in renewed demand and is sure to be sought at least in part, particularly by those operators who have felt and found the uncertainty of less staple forms of investment."

EGG-BUYING FOR HATCHING OFTEN IS UNSUCCESSFUL

Breeders Too Frequently Blamed for Poor Results Due to Speculative Causes.

Now that the hatching season is over for 1914, except in the case of a few breeders who hatch some fall chicks, it may not be amiss to consider some questions that arise in connection with the business of buying and selling eggs for hatching and baby chicks.

There is a good deal of misunderstanding about the practices that should govern the business of buying eggs and baby chicks. Practically every one who buys or sells these commodities wants to do the right, fair thing. But not all are agreed as to what is right and fair.

Buying eggs for hatching is a speculative, hazardous business. This ought to be apparent to every one, but it is not apparent, in many cases, to the buyer. The buyer expects the eggs to hatch. If they don't hatch well, he too often imagines he has been cheated. Usually he has been treated fairly. Often a breeder who has 'troubles of his own," in hatching eggs laid at home, who has, in fact, gotten very poor hatches from his own eggs, forgets all this when he buys eggs. He expects such shipped eggs to hatch close to 100 per cent. That's absurd.

Three months ago I bought two sittings of eggs from Massachusetts at a pretty long price, from the best breeder of a certain variety in the country. There were 26 fine looking eggs. I got three chicks. The eggs had all the appearance of having been roughly handled by the express company, though they were splendidly packed. If I had any grievance at all it was against the express company, in my opinion.

Amateur "Kicks" the Hardest.

I could have gone back at the Massachusetts breeder with a letter, telling about my experience, demanding either more eggs or the return of my money. If I had done that, I imagine the seller would have "come across," but would such a course have had any decency or fairness about it? I do not think so.

When the man at the other end sent the eggs he told me about the splendid hatches he was getting at that time. I know he was telling the truth. I cannot tell what others should do under the circumstances, but I know that I could not, without violating my conscience, demand satisfaction on account of the poor hatch. I would rather pocket the loss and be on friendly terms with myself.

It is usually the man with little experience in such matters who kicks hardest. I know how these things are from the selling and as well from the buying end. I sent two sittings East this spring. They turned out poorly, and yet a few days before these eggs were shipped I got 13 chicks out of 13 eggs at home.

It all means that shipping eggs for hatching is in the class of risks called extra hazardous, and this should never be forgotten in buying eggs for hatching. If one has evidence that the eggs were bad or if the chicks hatched are not true to name, these are matters for just complaint.

Some Give Guarantees.

If a breeder sells eggs and guarantees a certain percentage to hatch, that is all right. Some breeders do that, and when they do it they are bound to live up to their guarantee. One such guarantee is to replace the eggs that fail to hatch at half price. And that is fair. Any sort of guarantee or no guarantee at all is fair.

For myself I do not guarantee that eggs shipped will hatch. And that is understood when I ship them. I have, on the other hand, bought a good many eggs at good prices, with varying success, but I never yet made a complaint about a poor hatch.

Shipping baby chicks is also an uncertain matter. For chicks will die, especially with white diarrhoea, in the hands of all of us. Just the other day a case came to my notice. One woman sent to another 50 baby chicks. The shipper, knowing that chicks often die, sent 57. She claims they were in fine shape when she shipped them. After a few days they began to die, and all but 6 or 7, I think, died within two weeks of white diarrhoea. The buyer is making loud complaint and demands that the chicks that died be replaced. That is not only unfair. It is silly.

I know prominent breeders who long ago ceased selling eggs for hatching. One of the best known breeders in the country told me why he had discontinued that part of his business. As he put it: "I like to sleep nights. I sold them the best I had, but for various reasons some of the buyers got poor hatches. They wrote me letters calling me a thief and a robber. I couldn't stand it. I am too thin-skinned to stand abuse of that kind, so I just cut out the eggs for hatching business."

But don't get the idea that I am opposed to the business of selling eggs for hatching. I am not. I believe in it. Eggs do not always hatch well at home. They do not usually hatch so well when shipped. But often splendid hatches are secured from such eggs. If I buy a sitting of eggs and raise two or three chicks from the sitting of good quality, I have had my money's worth. It's a good way to get started in the poultry business, but if one really expects to get a fine start in pure bred poultry from one or two sittings of eggs, he may be disappointed. Don't expect $100 worth of chicks from a $3 sitting of eggs.

In this article I have rather taken the sider of the seller, because he usually comes in for the major share of abuse.

Poultry Problems Solved

Undeveloped Cockerel.

I have a White Rock cockerel hatched in February that shows no signs of his sex as yet. He does not crow and would like to know whether there is anything wrong with him or whether it is the nature of the Rocks to be slow in developing. He seems healthy.—Z. V. H., New Baden, Ill.

This, of course, is unnatural development, and the chances are he will never be fit for breeding purposes, although, if a valuable bird, it might pay to keep him a while longer and give him an opportunity to mature. Unless of unusually good breeding, he might as well be disposed of.

Rocks or Minorcas?

Which do you think is the best all-purpose breed of chickens, the Black Minorca or the Barred Rock?—Mrs. S. A. C., East St. Louis, Ill.

This would be a difficult question to answer, indeed, and we shall not attempt to do so. Both are excellent breeds and each has its own advantages and disadvantages. In the last analysis it all depends on the poultryman's own likes and dislikes. Our advice in this matter is simply to choose the breed that you "like best" for that is the one you will be best satisfied with and will naturally give the best care, hence the results will also be best.

Bumble-Foot.

Recently I noticed one of my White Rock hens was lame and on picking her up found the fleshy part of the foot very much swollen, with a hard, black spot as large as the end of the finger in the center. Someone told me it was "bumble-foot" caused by roosts that were too high and floors that are too hard. But my roosts are only 34 inches high and the floor is just dirt with ashes scattered over it. What is this trouble and what can be done for it?—Mrs. J. W. C., St. Louis, Mo.

You were advised correctly as to the name of this ailment. Bumble-foot is the name given to abscesses that form on the bottom of the feet. These are the result, usually, of bruises sustained from a variety of causes, but most often by jumping from a high perch. To effect a cure, lance the abscess, remove the pus, and then thoroughly wash the wound with a solution of carbolic acid—one part of the acid to five parts of warm water. After washing it is a good plan to bandage the foot to keep out the dirt until the wound begins to heal.

Ostrich Eggs and Turkeys.

Will you please tell me where I could obtain some ostrich eggs and what price I would have to pay for them?

I have some turkeys and wish you would give me some advice as to how to raise them.—Mrs. F. S., St. Louis, Mo.

So far as we know, the nearest ostrich farm to St. Louis is located near Little Rock, Ark. Would suggest that you write John H. Page, Secretary of the State Board of Agriculture, at Little Rock, and ask him to furnish this information. Park Commissioner Davis, at the city hall, might help you.

The subject of turkey raising is too large to cover fully in this department, especially since a somewhat extended article along this line was published on this page only a few weeks ago. It will pay you to write to the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., and ask for Farmers' Bulletin No. 200, entitled "Turkeys: Standard Varieties and Management." Copies are furnished free of charge as long as the supply lasts.

Feed well and liberally. On the other hand, it is easily possible to overfeed, especially in the case of the larger varieties of fowls. Over feeding causes the system to get overheated, causing liver and other troubles.

300,000 Chicks Sold by a Hatching Firm

Big things are being done by some who are making a specialty of hatching and selling baby chicks. As an example I refer to the Pittsburg Poultry Farms Co. of Pittsfield, Mass. This company began business seriously four years ago. In 1910 it sold 15,620 baby chicks; in 1911, 30,608; in 1912, 82,768; in 1913, 110,650; in 1914, 300,000. The last figure is an estimate, as the season's business was not over when the figures were given out. It is announced moreover, that all during the present season as many orders had to be declined as accepted. The chicks are pure bred White and Barred Rocks, and are sold when they are one day old.

The Pittsfield Poultry Farms Co. has advertised extensively. It is seeking to establish its trade mark, "Pittsfield Poultry."

The business of this company is not mentioned in order to boost it, but simply to furnish an illustration of the possibilities of the poultry business, when it is handled in a business way. I know nothing about the quality of the chicks this firm is selling. I assume the quality is good. If not, no amount of financial backing can make its business permanently successful.

Don't be in a hurry when you feed. Take plenty of time, especially if there are three or four pens. Walk through the pens three or four times, giving a little each time. The food will be relished more than if all thrown down in one place, and you will be better able to judge of the amount required.

When the old birds are molting, it is a good plan to give them some "conditioning" food, like sunflower seed or oil meal mixed with other soft feed. It helps in the molting process and it puts a "finish" on the new feathers

The growing chicks require different treatment from the old fowls. They should be fed differently and separately. The young stock should be fed all the muscle-forming food it will eat, but this is not a good ration for the old birds.

Warm, stale water out in the sun is very likely to cause diarrhoea and other forms of indigestion, especially in growing chicks.

SUNDAY POST-DISPATCH'S REVIEW OF MARKET CONDITIONS

WALL ST. STRIVES TO IMPROVE THE MARKET POSITION

Efforts of Banking Interests Are Centered on Opening the Export Trade.

COTTON IS A FACTOR

Financial Arrangements for Handling Crops Favorably Influence Sentiment.

By Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—The Evening Post, in its copyrighted financial weekly review, today says:

"Further progress has been made this week towards strengthening the position of this market. Action by the Treasury with reference to assisting the cotton growers has in a measure relieved the banks of the large reserve centers which otherwise would have had to assume a heavier burden. Better shipping facilities have so enlarged wheat exports as to materially increase the supply of exchange. The demand for currency shipments to interior markets has declined. The use of Clearing House loan certificates by the banks of the important reserve cities has been reduced, rather than enlarged.

"Much remains to be done, however, before normal facilities can be offered in the foreign exchange market. This problem is in a fair chance of being settled satisfactorily, with the adoption of a broad plan for providing sufficient exchange to meet current needs, which the bankers have under consideration today.

"The proposal will involve the shipment of some gold to Ottawa, in trust for the Bank of England. With the credits thus created, it will be possible to take care of the maturing New York City obligations and provide for what additional exchange is urgently demanded in connection with maturing railroad loans and other engagements which involve large payments to foreign markets.

Problem Is Important.

"This problem is of pressing importance, not alone because of the New York City loans, but also because of the great inconvenience to business interests through inability to buy exchange, except at almost prohibitive rates. In spite of the increased supply of grain bills, resulting from the large wheat exports, the inquiry from persons having to make large payments in London this week has been so great as to force a further advance in quotations for both sight bills and cable remittances.

"The situation is being gradually corrected, however, and it is to be hoped that the plan under discussion may be adopted without delay. Just as soon as the New York City maturities are provided for the whole foreign exchange market will be helped, for the fact that such large payments have been overhanging the market made it natural for bankers to buy up exchange so as to accumulate the necessary credits in London.

"Notwithstanding the preparations under way by Southern banks to take out emergency currency based on warehouse receipts according to the terms of the treasury proposal, the banks of St. Louis have arranged to make heavy loans to the Southern banks with cotton as security, taken on the basis of $35 a bale. This is significant, since the St. Louis banks are accustomed to lend heavily on cotton and have to keep in touch with the situation at the south to an extent that is not perhaps true of any other reserve city, excepting perhaps New Orleans.

Banks to Make Loans.

"The banks here will renew large loans to Southern banks which mature within a week or two. Some of these renewals have been already arranged, and the total indebtedness is probably as large as has ever been reckoned with at this season.

"News that the Federal Reserve Board has arranged for a conference with leading bankers next Friday, touching the advisability of organizing the 12 regional banks, shows that the letters sent to leading bankers here, asking their views on the subject, must have brought forth conflicting replies.

"The question has been under advisement ever since the organization of the board was effected, and members are naturally desirous of getting advice from men who have been actively engaged with solving the problems that have arisen since the European crisis developed. For that reason the frank discussions which may be looked for at the meeting in Washington are sure to be interesting.

"The question will be answered differently by the different bankers, according to the special problems encountered in each of the 12 reserve districts. The fact that the meeting has been called, however, does not mean that the immediate organization of the system is contemplated, or that the member banks will be asked to change from the old system to the new, during the period that the loan certificates and the emergency currency is being used.

"But the conference will afford an opportunity for the members of the board to receive first-hand information from the men who will have the real work of changing from one system to another. The development, however, indicates progress and shows that the most careful steps will be taken to safeguard the situation when the change is made. The fact that the board is now organized and ready to act whenever seems prudent means a great deal.

"It is to be hoped that the data received by the Controller of the Currency, in his answer to his queries touching the attitude of the Wall street banks during the late crisis, may be tabulated and published. The questions relating to the action of banks in calling loans during the four weeks that the Stock Exchange has been closed were the most interesting.

"The replies sent in indicate that the banks have called very few loans of their own and that they have declined small loans for out-of-town lenders. So far as any discrimination against collateral is concerned, the policy of most banks has been to let the collateral remain undisturbed, except in the case of securities of a highly speculative character or in cases where circumstances have made it necessary for the lenders to ask to have the margin increased by putting up additional securities or by reducing the loan.

"The facts are of general interest, not alone because of the large loans made by banks here, but on account of the [illegible],000,000 advanced by interior banks on Wall street collateral."

Investor's Manual.

George H. Burr & Co., 14 Wall street, New York, have ready for free distribution latest edition of the Investor's Pocket Manual, which contains current statistics, records, high and low prices of listed and unlisted stocks and bonds of railroad, industrial and mining corporations; also a table showing yield of securities purchased at various prices. LONDON BANKERS FIGURE ON THE WAR'S DURATION

Financial Position Abroad Will Depend on Early Ending of Strife.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch and New York World.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—It is quite impossible to speculate intelligently on the duration of the war. The one unquestionable fact is that if it is prolonged the financial, industrial and commercial situation in Germany will become desperate, through the blockade of its ports by our fleet.

Important schemes are under consideration for effecting a settlement of the Stock Exchange position, outstanding when business was shut down. This will be preparatory to reopening the exchange, which, however, is not a practical matter of discussion. Our financial community, taken as a body, strongly favors further extension of the existing moratorium.

Your people may disregard all rumors that the London banks are not performing their duty in the way of financing trade. They are not accommodating those excessively hopeful people who are proclaiming that war ought not to be accompanied by any interruption of trade prosperity. This fallacious talk has its only ground in the fact that certain industries are stimulated by Government purchases for war purposes.

World's Markets Influenced.

But the restriction and suffering, in the world's finance and trade, is wholly inevitable. Our soundest financial people, even if they had the choice, would welcome slow recovery, rather than immediate reversion to normal conditions.

The effect of the Bank of England's policy of free discounting is seen not only in the increase of 62,600,000 pounds sterling in such loans since the end of July, but in this week's showing of 125,000,000 pounds sterling of private deposits, which is 70,700 pounds sterling above the final July figures and 81,000,000 pounds sterling above this week last year.

"The bank's gradual assumption of this burden of surplus credits is automatically helping to make the wheels of the money market revolve.

It is also assisting trade, for the position of accepting houses is much strengthened. But the position cannot finally be cleared up until the war is over; for remittances from continental Europe, against its London bills of exchange, are stopped. For the present the Government is financing these banking obligations; but, meantime, the liability of the accepting houses remains.

Your exchange market is still the chief problem. It is considered that your bankers are relying too closely on early solution through export of foodstuffs. We feel that you may be underestimating the present extent of American liabilities in Europe, including maturing short term notes and that you may overlook the necessarily great reduction in your exports of cotton and other commodities not in the class of foodstuffs. You must also allow for the impossibility of selling American securities in Europe.

EARLY EXCESS OF CATTLE LEADS TO MARKET DECLINES

Prime Beef Steers, However, Bring Price Equal to Highest Record for August.

Receipts at National Stockyards.

	This Wk.	Last Wk.	Last Yr.
Cattle	28,000	30,921	35,563
Hogs	40,000	36,943	42,707
Sheep	17,500	16,740	20,604
Horses & mules	750	659	2,166

While the past week's runs were of good volume, they were not nearly so generous as the previous week, the native aggregate especially showing a large decrease. Despite this fact, declines again developed during the forepart of the period, for there was an excess of supply the first two days. The beef steer supply was of fairly generous volume all week and again carried only a very small proportion of prime beeves. There was a strong demand for good steers and they closed on a 10@15c higher basis. The top was $10.50, a new record for the year and equal to the highest price ever paid for beef steers during the month of August. Too many medium to common steers were available for the demand, and buyers were bearish, consequently a decline of 25@35c was evident on the bulk of these grades.

Had the supply of heifers carried more good ones instead of a liberal offering of medium and common classes, there might have been a different story to tell of the week's market. However, just a small showing of good heifers was available, and they sold steady. Medium kinds, however, suffered because the supply was too large and because butchers did not lend a normal support to the market. The bulk of medium to common heifers, and grass kinds in particular, were 15@35c lower. Some steers and heifers at $9 were top for the week.

Cows were in generous supply all week and while some decline was evident on medium grades early, yet toward the close they became firmer and practically all of the loss was regained. Canners and cutters were strong for the week. A generous supply of bulls was on sale, but there was a good demand for them and market was fully steady. Vealers were on a strong basis at all times and closed strong to a quarter higher, with a late top of $10.75. Stockers and feeders enjoyed a fairly good week. While demand from the country was not heavy, local traders were in the market and prices were close to steady in all transactions.

Receipts in the quarantine division were very moderate in volume and came mostly from Oklahoma, although there was a better offering from southeastern territory than has been received for some time. Order buyers failed to support the market and packers were in a bearish humor. Consequently the bulk of Oklahoma steers were 15@25c lower. No strictly good grassers were offered. While canners and all grades of she-stuff, also yearlings, declined early in the week, they were stronger toward the close and the end of the week found them about even with the previous period.

Sheep Market Declines.

With only a moderate supply of sheep and lambs on sale, the market was on the decline the fore part of the week, sheep of all kinds losing 25, while the lambs suffered a loss of 50 from the latter part of the week previous. After Tuesday there was no material change in the trade. Just what was the cause of the break was a mystery to the trade.

Early in the week best lambs sold at $7.75@7.80, but later the very same kinds were selling at $7.50@7.75, while the plain grades sold at $7@7.40, and the culls and common kinds in general went at $5@6.75, most of them at $6.25@6.50. Buyers sorted the lambs pretty close all week, but were not quite so particular the latter part.

Best sheep at the outset of the week went at $5.25 to the slaughterers and later at $5, while the good breeding ewes sold at $5.50@5.75; fair, $4.50@5.25; good stockers and choppers, $3.50@4.25; fair, $2.50@3.40, and bucks, $3.75.

Hog Prices Up and Down.

There was no material change to the trade all week. Prices were up and down, but the advances and declines were small, and at the end of the week not far from where they were at the end of the previous week. Good grade hogs of 175 to 225 pounds seem to be still in the best demand and are bringing the top prices. These hogs are wanted for shipment East, as well as for slaughter by the city butchers.

The top during the week ranged between $9.35@9.45, while the bulk of the desirable hogs went at $9.10@9.30, although there were quite a few plain heavy hogs, as well as some lighter weights, that went at $8.85@9. These latter kinds all went to the packers. Rough heavy packers went at $8.25@8.60. Good mixed packers sold at $9.10@9.25.

Lights and pigs were of rather irregular sale all week, and only the best could be disposed of at satisfactory prices. Best grade of lights, weighing 165 pounds or less, went at $9@9.35; fair grades, $8.40@8.90; best pigs under 125 pounds, $8@8.50; fair to medium, $8@8.85, and the common to fair, $6.25@7.75, according to quality.

Horse Sales Stronger, Mules Drag.

The runs have again been on the moderate order; in fact, they were of such volume as to be called small. More buyers were on the market from Eastern and Southern sections, and the market exhibited more strength than it has in some time. Buyers were in excess, with a small supply, and barely enough was on hand to fill all orders. But at the active movement there was no material advance noted in values, and the majority of sellers quoted the market as only being on a strong basis.

The usual slow, draggy trade in mules prevailed, and the market was anything but good. Buyers were scarce and not many animals found sale. A few miners and big mules sold, but in all instances sellers were forced to cut the price in order to move the animals.

U.S. TREASURY PLAN OF AID REASSURES TRADERS IN COTTON

Promise to Accept Warehouse Receipts as Currency Collateral Brightens Outlook.

The cotton conference that was held in Washington has served to reassure all branches of the cotton trade. Secretary McAdoo's assent to any safe use of the Treasury Department's powers means much to every business man in the country. He expressed himself as being unqualifiedly opposed to any scheme of valorization, and opposed to any issuance of currency by State banks because he thought that inflation of currency would mean the ruin of the nation's credit. He promised that he would allow 70 per cent of the authorized issue of currency to be protected by properly issued warehouse receipts; and said that the national banks could issue all the necessary currency.

The conference considered at great length the value at which cotton might be used as collateral. There was a wide difference of opinion, ranging from 6 cents to 8 cents per pound; there was no attempt made to fix a price at which cotton should be marketed. In fact, there was a decided disavowal of any such intention. The fact remains that the producer of cotton has received a well-deserved strengthening of his courage in the face of what looked like disaster. The wisdom of the present administration in pressing legislation to the completion of the very serviceable reserve bank system, is apparent now to the most skeptical. Surely it is a happier state of affairs to make use of the tools we have at hand than to be driven to fashion our tools in a time of emergency such as we are experiencing.

Rapid Increase of Spindles.

As matters now stand, the farmer can take his product, the very real wealth of this country, and borrow sufficient from his home bank to meet his immediate needs. The necessity of sacrifice of value will be obviated.

While the problem of marketing the cotton crop is not solved, the whole question appears in a different light. The absorption of nearly two-thirds of our big crop of cotton, which we have been accustomed to export, looked like an impossible task and was, except for the timely aid of our Government through the reserve banks.

Now if the American mills push the advantage gained through the diversion of competitors' energy from trade to war, the task of American mill owners will be to secure additional labor for use in their mills, and two problems, a further absorption of cotton and employment for more laborers, will be solved in the one process.

It is generally thought that the increase in takings by our own manufacturers and by foreign manufacturers not located in belligerent countries will absorb all but about three millions of the crop; such a surplus would require only $120,000,000 to finance, at a loan basis of $40 per bale. If the European war should end within a year, such loans would be speedily released. If, on the other hand, the war continued for a longer period, who knows to what extent our consumption of cotton may be increased? The total number of active spindles in the United States in 1913 was 31,519,766, compared with 23,672,064 in 1904; here is an increase of nearly 8,000,000 spindles, about one-third, in the space of nine years, with no greater incentive than a gradual trade extension.

Now, however, our manufacturers' territory jumps a narrow boundary to an almost unrestricted world trade, with the knowledge that, even upon resumption of work, their competitors will not have an easy task when they begin breaking men back into the humdrum business of mill life after a period of excitement and demoralization.

The "Daily Consular and Trade Reports" says that work has largely stopped around Lille! in the unfortified towns only about 25 per cent of the spindles were running. "In districts along Belgian frontier work in large fortified towns is less completely stopped than in Vosges, but successful advances of German army via Belgium would result in similar action and conditions in fortified towns. French cotton textile production is now 25 to 35 per cent capacity, with prospects of further reduction and complete stoppage if war is prolonged. Improved conditions are unlikely within six months, therefore prolonged reduction of European consumption of raw cotton is probable."

Under the circumstances, it is unbelievable that our manufacturers will not grasp the opportunity to work their mills on double shift as well as to increase capacity as fast as labor is available; such a policy would mean a speedy reduction in the amount of cotton to be carried, and a better assuranceo f the permanent extension of export trade.

The growing cotton crop is making excellent progress, and it looks now as if a full yield is prmised. Some complain of shedding and too much rain is heard, but this only in spots. In the main reports are good. Less attention is paid to condition than usual; the fact that exports are restricted leads most traders to the pessimistic view that whatever the size of the crop, it is large enough.

Prices are not easily quotable, and Augusta is the only market in this country which makes an attempt to name prices. Middling is quoted there at 9¾c for old, 8¾c for new cotton. The inability to sell exchange is restricting business not only in raw cotton, but also in the export of cotton goods. The dry goods trade, however, is rather good, because of buying by retailers, who are not carrying large stocks.

Cotton Goods Market Quiet.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—The primary cotton goods market was quiet today. Prices on unfinished goods were irregular. Buyers offered to place contracts on print cloths and brown sheetings under the prices established on Friday, but these propositions were not accepted. Linen prices pointed upward for forward delivery. Advances of ¼c to ½c were made on domestic linen crashes and toweling. Some sellers of men's and women's cotton knit underwear reduced their prices on goods for the fall season. Burlap values were firm.

Kansas City Livestock.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 29.—Hogs—Receipts, 700; 5c higher; bulk, $8.90@9.25; heavy, $9.10@9.25; packers and butchers, $9.10@9.30; light, $9@9.30; pigs, $8@8.75. Cattle—Receipts, 300; steady; prime fed steers, $9.75@10.50; dressed beef steers, $7.30@9.60; Western steers, $6.50@9.25; Southern steers, $5.25@7.75; cows, $4.25@7.25; heifers, $6@9.50; stockers and feeders, $5.75@8.25; bulls, $5.25@6.75; calves, $6.50@10.50. No Livestock From Abroad.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—The State Department gave warning today that Americans cannot expect to obtain livestock from England while the war lasts. Representative Barnhardt of Indiana was advised by the Bureau of Trade Relations that England has given notice that horses purchased there will not be shipped but that the sale price will be refunded. The State Department explained that the same plan would be applied to other livestock.

St. Joseph Livestock.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Aug. 29.—Hogs—Receipts, 1800; steady to 5c lower; top, $9.15; bulk, $8@9.10. Cattle—Receipts, 50; steady; steers, $7.50@10.50; cows and heifers, $4@9.50; calves, $6@10.50. Sheep—Receipts, none; nominal; lambs, $7@7.50.

CHICAGO WHEAT PRICES ADVANCE AFTER EARLY DIP

Range Upward Is Over Two Cents on Active Futures; Corn Also Firm.

CHICAGO, Aug. 29.—The market for cereals today was of the usual quiet Saturday half-session variety and without impressive changes in prices. In wheat opening prices were ⅛c lower to ¼c higher. Scattered selling depressed prices ⅝c to ½c under the previous close. Here resting orders were reached, and there was a recovery of ½c to ¾c over yesterday.

General rains depressed corn, and at the opening prices were off ⅛c to ⅜c, where the market steadied on a little speculative buying.

Oats opened ¼c to ½c down, but on resting orders to buy the loss was recovered and a net gain of ⅛c to ¼c was registered.

Provisions were firm in sympathy with hogs. Opening prices were 2½c to 5c higher.

The wheat market reacted on scattered buying based on reports of export sales, and the close was firm, 2@2½c over yesterday.

The close on corn was firm, ⅛c to 1c higher.

Coffee Market Is Unchanged.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—No change was reported in the coffee situation here today. Considerable progress is said to have been made during the past week, with reference to renewed trade with Brazil, but so far credits have been available for financing only a moderate business in the cost and freight market, and holders of desirable coffees in the local stock are reported generally firm in their price views. Rio 7s were quoted at 7¾c, and Santos 4s, at 12½c. The Brazilian cables reported an advance of 175 reis in the market at Rio at the close yesterday, but the curb market at Santos was unchanged, and no change was reported in cost and freight offers. Receipts at the two Brazilian ports were 16,000 bags on Friday; Sao Paulo receipts were 30,000 bags, and Jundiahy 24,000.

Hogs in Demand.

CHICAGO, Aug. 29.—There was an active demand for hogs today and some of it came from shippers. Light hogs found the most favor and one sale of choice was made at $9.90. Cattle were very dull, but steady. In live muttons, mostly lambs were for sale and as the run was as light as the demand, prices ruled steady.

Wheat futures continued their upward flight 8c to 10c a bushel last week, touched new high levels since the European war advance started, then lost a large part of the upturn. The price movement of the market was the most sensational recorded since the famous Leiter corner in May wheat.

On Thursday, when the high records were scored, prices mounted over 5c a bushel in less than five minutes, with changes of ½c to 1c between trades a common occurrence. The week's final market was more normal in tone, as commission houses were inclined to clamp the lid down on excessive speculation, unless protected by very wide margins.

Opinion differs as to the ultimate effect on prices of the war in Europe, but predictions of $2 wheat are freely made by some of the best-posted traders on the Merchants' Exchange, compared with $1.15 now.

T. E. Price, head of the J. E. Price Commission Co., is a firm believer in high-priced wheat.

"The war in Europe," says Price, "has created a condition never before faced in the history of the grain trade. Every big foreign wheat producing country is involved in the strife. This will mean, in the face of the German successes, that the war will be a protracted one.

Europe Is Short of Supplies.

"Europe is short in her wheat supplies over 200,000,000 bushels, compared with a normal crop, and would need to import enormous amounts of wheat regardless of the war. With war on her hands, the requirements will be augmented 50 per cent. Even at present, farms in France, Belgium, Austria and Russia are being decimated of men and horses and much of the harvest in these countries has not been completed. Soon will come the time for preparing and planting Europe's next crop, and it is apparent that the acreage will be enormously reduced.

"With the pinch of winter will come the big demand for wheat products, for with millions of fighting men in the field the demand for wheat feed should prove sensational. With Europe facing these conditions and short 200,000,000 bushels in her supplies, she will have to turn to America for her needs, and America can supply them from a record-breaking crop of 900,000,000 bushels of wheat, but at advancing prices.

"Is it not natural, from a trade standpoint, that America should demand high prices for her wheat, when she knows that a continuation of present conditions will mean an inestimable reduction of wheat raising in countries that produce over four-fifths of the world's supplies.

"Russia alone last year produced 863,000,000 bushels in 63 governments and 137,717,000 bushels in 10 others. Germany raised 171,000,000 bushels; France 322,730,000 bushels; Austria-Hungary 219,000,000 bushels; Servia 11,000,000 bushels and Italy 208,000,000 bushels. A 25 per cent reduction in acreage in these producing countries would mean the worst wheat famine the world has ever known, and this is what the world seems to be facing at the present time.

Grain Traders Are Wise.

"It is knowledge of these facts, which mean a short wheat crop next year, as well as the enormous demands for wheat which must continue while the war lasts, that makes me believe in very high prices. Naturally the American farmer will not sell his wheat cheap when he knows that it may be worth a lot more money later on. He will hold at least a portion of his supplies and this makes the advance in price all the more sure.

"One has only to look at the price of cash No. 2 red wheat in the St. Louis market during the Civil War, and for 10 years following, to see what war means. Wheat sold at $2.80 per bushel in 1865; $2.50 in 1866; $2.85 in 1867; $2.05 in 1868; $2.10 in 1869, and $1.50 or higher every year thereafter until 1877.

"It is true that these prices resulted from war in our own country, but if they did, what must wheat be worth across the ocean, with the whole of Europe in a conflict that may last for two or three years? It no doubt will be quoted at famine figures, and if so, American markets must certainly follow, as the United States holds the winning hand in having the world's surplus wheat.

Corn futures were advanced in sympathy with wheat, and on reports of poor crop yields. Oats scored high records along with other grains, and on reports of enormous export sales to England.

The domestic wheat visible decreased 852,000 bu for the week; corn increased 136,000 bu; oats increased 3,297,000 bu.

The total visible shows:

A cable received from Broomhall stated that Turkey has promised the British Government that they will permit free passage through the Dardanelles of British grain steamers.

Foreign Crops Are Fair.

The foreign crop summary said:

United Kingdom—Harvesting is making god progress. Supplies of new wheat are fair and the quality mostly good.

France and Holland—The weather is generally fine and harvesting is progressing slowly.

Germany—No advices received.

Russia—In the Southeast the recent rain is reported to have damaged the quality.

Italy—The minimum amount for importation is reckoned at 40,000,000 bushels.

India—The weather is seasonable and recent rain was beneficial.

Argentina—Weather generally favorable for both wheat and corn, it being cold and dry.

The European wheat visible this week amounts to 56,488,000 bu, against 57,656,000 last week, showing a decrease of 1,168,000. Last week there was a decrease of 1,848,000 and last year an increase of 2,400,000 bu, when the total amounted to 67,500,000.

A report from the International Institue of Agricultrue at Rome to the Department of Agriculture stated that the estimated production of corn this year in Italy is 102,358,000 bushels, which is 5.6 per cent less than produced last year; rice, 1,102,304,000 pounds, which is 18 per cent less; wine, 1,148,872,000 gallons, which is 5 per cent below last year's production. No other important modifications have been made since the July report.

Broomhall cabled: Total shipments of wheat and flour from North America amounted to 10,778,000 bu last week. Corn, 69,000 and oats 534,000. Of the total wheat, United Kingdom took 7,063,000 bu, France 1,839,000, Italy 136,000, Scandinavia 208,000, and the balance to non-Europe.

Clement Curtis' crop report said: "Our reports show improvement in condition of corn in Illinois and northward, including greater portion of Iowa. Kansas has lost ground. Our Southern correspondents say general improvement has taken place in past month and late corn doing splendidly."

Italy official: The corn crop is placed at 101,516,000 bu; last year, 94,000,000 bu.

TRAIN KILLS FOUR TOURISTS IN AUTO AT ST. JACOBS, ILL.

Two Men and Two Women Believed to Be From Oklahoma Struck by Pennsylvania 24-Hour Flyer.

WOMEN'S BODIES FOUND ON FRONT OF THE ENGINE

They Are Carried Half Mile Before Train Is Stopped—Machine Is Torn to Fragments—Letters Are Only Aid to Identification.

Four persons, two men and two women, supposed to be tourists from Oklahoma, were killed at 5:20 o'clock yesterday afternoon when an automobile in which they were driving was struck by the Pennsylvania 24-hour train from New York to St. Louis, near St. Jacobs, Ill., about 19 miles from East St. Louis.

One man and one woman were elderly. The man had letters in his pocket that had been addressed to Robert Grundemann, Lamont, Ok.

The other man and woman were much younger, neither being apparently more than 30 years old. The young woman resembled the older woman closely enough to have been her daughter. In the pockets of the younger man were letters addressed to M. H. Pahl, Punkawah, Ok.

The place of the accident was where the Old National Trail road crosses the Vandalia-Pennsylvania tracks at grade. The country is open thereabouts and it is not thought that the motorists failed to see the train. It is thought that they tried to beat it across.

Auto Is Demolished.

The train is one of the fastest in the country and often maintains a speed of 60 miles an hour on that stretch of track. The fact that it tore the automobile, a Ford touring car, into fragments, is thought to indicate that the engine was making its best time.

The elder man's body was thrown to the north side of the track upon a small bank. The younger man's body was thrown into a ditch about 20 feet to the south. Physicians who examined the bodies said that death must have been instantaneous in each case.

The bodies of both women were jammed upon the front of the engine and remained there until the train was stopped almost half a mile from the crossing. The train crew removed them to a baggage car and the train was backed up and the bodies of the men recovered. All four were turned over to the Coroner, who had them removed to the Schoeppel morgue in Collinsville.

Auto Moving When Hit.

George J. Serrin of Terre Haute, Ind., engineer of the train, told a Post-Dispatch reporter that he did not see the auto on the track until it was only about 40 feet away. Then he threw on the emergency brakes, but it was too late. The engine hit the auto at the rear wheels. Serrin declares that he got such a photographic view of the machine that he even recognized its make. It was moving when it was hit.

The body of the older woman was thrown on top of the cowcatcher. That of the younger woman was thrown to the plate at the boiler head, where it lodged until the engine could be stopped. Serrin later in the evening drove the same engine on a return trip to Terre Haute, although he declared before starting that his nerves were badly shaken by the accident. It was the first time, he said, an engine driven by him had killed anyone.

Ernest Justus, a telephone lineman, who was working a short distance from the grade crossing, told the Coroner he heard the crash when the train hit the car. The air was full of dust so he couldn't see exactly what happened. Tis first thought, he said, was that the engine's boiler had exploded. Then he saw the debris from the wrecked auto and ran to the place, to find the two dead men.

According to Coroner Sims, everything about the wreck indicated that the four persons were making an auto tour. The personal equipment was such as a party of well-to-do persons might take on a long auto jaunt. The car bore license tag No. 3814 of Billings, Ok.

Among the elder man's papers was a postal card from Detroit, Mich., saying: "Dear Brother: I received your card Saturday. Mac." It was thought that this card might possibly throw light on the party's destination.

SUFFRAGISTS PUT 18 CONGRESSMEN ON BLACKLIST

Nine Senators and Nine Representatives Will Be Opposed for Re-Election.

CHICAGO, Aug. 29.—Nine United States Senators and nine Representatives, "whose opposition to woman suffrage is so powerful as to constitute the greatest obstacle to Federal legislation that the women have to face," are named in a statement issued here today by the National American Suffrage Association.

The statement, written by Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, president of the association, and Mrs. Medill McCormick, chairman of the Congressional Committee, appeals to all suffrage organizations to concentrate their influence to defeat these men for re-election:

The nine Senators whose defeat the women urge are:

Brandegee of Connecticut.
Clark of Arkansas.
Dillingham of Vermont.
Fletcher of Florida.
Gore of Oklahoma.
Root of New York.
Shively of Indiana.
Smith of Maryland.
Lodge of Massachusetts.

The Representatives named are:

Underwood of Alabama.
Mann of Illinois.
Fitzgerald of New York.
Galloway of Texas.
Garner of Texas.
Garrett of Tennessee.
Hay of Virginia.
Sisson of Mississippi.

"This is believed to be the first time in the history of the woman suffrage movement that women have resorted to a blacklist of those opposed to them," reads the announcement. "The Congressional Committee has spent a year in lobbying for the passage of national legislation which would bring woman suffrage throughout the United States. We have polled both Houses of Congress repeatedly and we know how every member stands. We have gone further than that in the lower House, where it was possible to obtain, in addition, actual records of members upon humanitarian measures in which women of the country are interested."

Besides the signatures of Dr. Shaw and Mrs. McCormick, the statement is signed by Mrs. Antoinette Funk and Mrs. Sherman M. Booth of Chicago. Mrs. Helen Gardener of Washington, Mrs. Mary C. Bradford of Denver, Mrs. Desha Breckinridge of Lexington, Ky.; Mrs. John Tucker of San Francisco and Mrs. Edward Drier of Brooklyn.

COL. MULHALL TO MARRY

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Aug. 29.—Col. Martin M. Mulhall of Baltimore, former lobbyist and "field agent" of the National Association of Manufacturers, obtained a license here today to marry Miss Julia Kahnweiler of Media. Col. Mulhall, in answering the questions of the chief license clerk, gave his age as 58 years; his business as a merchant and his residence as Baltimore, Md. He presented papers showing he was divorced March 25, 1913, at Baltimore.

Miss Kahnweiler gave her age as 38 and residence at Media. The couple stated that Magistrate Charles P. Rooney would perform the ceremony.

PRINCETON BIBLE TEACHER CHARGED WITH HERESY

Clergy at Stonybrook Conference Threaten Boycott Unless Prof. Miller Is Ousted.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—Boycott of Princeton University by Presbyterians, who heretofore have regarded that seat of learning as a denominational stronghold, is threatened by members of the Stonybrook Association, composed of ministers assembled in Stonybrook, L. I., through the summer for conference and recreation, unless the university trustees promptly disavow a magazine article by Lucius Hopkins Miller, assistant professor of the chair of Biblical instruction, and dismiss the offender from his position.

Heresy will be the basis for the ministerial onslaught on Prof. Miller, who, it is charged, questions the virgin birth, the divinity of Christ, the casting out of devils other miracles and the resurrection.

Leading clergymen like the Rev. Dr. John F. Carson of the Central Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, formerly Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Rev. Dr. David G. Wylie, formerly pastor of the Scotch Presbyterian Church, Manhattan, now secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Church Erection, have declared the magazine article to be so heretical that Prof. Miller is not a safe instructor for young men reared in the Presbyterian faith.

Complaint Sent to Trustees.

Complaint of the article has been sent to every member of the Princeton Board of Trustees. This became known when a pamphlet made its appearance on the grounds of the Stonybrook Association, entitled "The Devil in Cap and Gown," from the pen of the Rev. Dr. Ford C. Ottman, one of the first authorities in Bible teaching in the denomination.

"No crime more dastardly can be imagined," Dr. Carson is quoted as having said, "than that of a teacher in a Christian university or college undermining the faith of the boys and girls in our Christian homes. We do not send our boys and girls to college to have their confidence in the Bible, their love for and faith in Jesus Christ shattered and destroyed by the quibbling of self-labeled scholarship."

THREE GIRLS INJURED WHEN AUTO HITS TREE

Police reports last night stated that three young women who had accepted an invitation from two men, strangers to them, to take an automobile ride in St. Louis County, south of St. Louis, had been injured when the machine struck a tree in the Jefferson Barracks reservation.

The women were Misses Sophia and Catherine Krame, 16 and 17 years old, and Louise Masur, 18, all residing at 4524 Louisiana avenue.

They told the police they were standing at Louisiana avenue and Neosho street when the two men in the automobile invited tem tho go riding. They stopped at several saloons, they said, and the men drank liquor. The driver of the car, they told the police, was intoxicated, and after they entered the Government reservation the machine struck a tree and was overturned, the occupants being thrown out.

The girls were severely cut and bruised. While they were being treated at the Barracks hospital, the men righted the car and drove away.

LEPER SUSPECT ESCAPES

Physicians at quarantine hospital last night reported to the police that George Rusuls, a Greek, who was taken to the hospital yesterday suspected of being a leper, had walked away soon after being received. They asked the police to apprehend him.

Rusuls was held at the city dispensary for two days after physicians of the Barnard Free Skin and Cancer Hospital had reported that they believed he was suffering from leprosy. He was forwarded by the dispensary physicians yesterday to the isolation hospital.

Before being sent to the dispensary he had been living at 1404 Pine street.

PROCLAMATION TO THE SWISS

Of the St Louis Consular District.

Confederates—In view of the grave war situation by which Switzerland is under obligation to protect her neutrality, the Swiss Legation in Washington, D. C., has requested me to arrange for a collection of funds for the Swiss Red Cross Society within my district. To this end I have created a Central Committee in St. Louis, Mo., consisting of the following Swiss gentlemen: Mr. L. Meng, Mr. E. Biedermann and Mr. E. Muehlemann. Besides, arrangements are made to organize subcommittees in all the important cities of my district to assist in the collecting of contributions, which have to be remitted into the hands of the treasurer of the Central Committee, Mr. Eugene Muehlemann, care Swiss Consulate, 807 Merchants-Laclede Building, St. Louis, Mo. We herewith appeal to all the Swiss and Swiss societies of the German, the French and the Italian tongue within the borders of Southern Illinois, the States of Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska to remember their home country in these trialsome days. The hour has come when we have an opportunity to show our true patriotism by our deeds. Let no one hold off. Let each and every Swiss do his duty in a liberal manner. The small as well as the large contributions are equally appreciated.

By order of the Legation of Switzerland in Washington, D. C.

The Swiss Consul of the St. Louis District.

DR. JOHN J. MEYER.

STARKLOFF WRITES TO WALL, TELLS OF DANGER IN WATER

Head of Health Department Declares It Is His Duty to Warn Public.

Health Commissioner Starkloff yesterday sent to Water Commissioner Wall a letter in reply to a letter sent to him by Wall, who objected to official statements by Dr. Starkloff that St. Louis water should be boiled because of the presence of dangerous bacilli.

Dr. Starkloff repeats his previous statement of the finding of colon bacilli in the water, and declares it to be his duty to warn the public that the use of the water in dangerous to human life.

His letter follows:

"I am in receipt of your letter of the 25th inst., in which you state that the water now being supplied by your department for domestic purposes is as wholesome as it has been at any time during the past year and protesting against the action of this department in questioning its use for such purposes.

"Dr. F. A. Baldwin is City Bacteriologisct and is by law required to do the bacteriological work for the Health Department. He has reported to me that he has found colon bacilli in the water taken from the city's water supply since Aug. 21, the water which people drink and use in the preparation of their food. This finding he confirms by additional and special examinations.

"Colon bacilli are found in the intestines of men and animals and their presence suggests fecal contamination. It is an accepted law of sanitation that when such bacilli are found in any substance intended for human food or drink, such substance is dangerous to human life.

"I am Health Commissioner of this city, and my duty is to guard, by every means in my power, the lives of our citizens.

"With the information submitted to me, I would be criminally negligent did I not warn the public of the conditions as they are presented to me. I am not pretending to pass on whether or not your bacteriologist or Dr. Baldwin is correct in his report. I am accepting as correct the report of the official bacteriologist who has been assigned by law to this department for such work. I do not care to take the responsibility of assuming, as you do, that he is mistaken.

"I have asked Dr. Baldwin to forward to you his methods of determining the presence of colon bacilli in water. Very respectfully.

"MAX C. STARKLOFF,
"Health Commissioner.

"P. S.—While writing this letter Dr. Carl J. Kontz, medical examiner of the Burlington R. R., calls on me and informs me that on Aug. 18 he personally took water from the tap on Eighteenth and Clark avenue, in carefully prepared sterile bottle, which he forwarded to the company's bacteriologist at Aurora, Ill., who reports having found gas-forming organisms and states that the water, in his opinion, shows evidence of contamination."

4 HELD IN ROBBERY CASE

Intoxicated Man Charges Other Three With Holdup.

Charles Miller, 45 years old, of Claiffar, Ill., is locked up at the Carr Street Police Station, together with three men who, he says, robbed him of $37 at 10:30 a. m., yesterday.

Miller stopped a policeman shortly after the alleged robbery and said he had been robbed in an alley west of Eleventh street, between Franklin avenue and Wash street.

The three men were immediately arrested, at Miller's request. No money was found on them. Owing to Miller being intoxicated, he was locked up with the others until he becomes sober.

CHICAGO GRAND OPERA DATES ARE CANCELED

Engagement Impossible Because Principals and Chorus Men Have Joined Foreign Armies.

CHICAGO, Aug. 29.—So many singers are endangering their lives and voices in the European conflict that the directors of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, after a despairing two days' meeting, announced tonight there would be no performances the coming season. Bernard Ulrich, manager of the company, cabled the singers, notifying them their contracts had been canceled.

"All the principals are abroad," said Ulrich. "Among those who have enlisted in the French army are M. Muratore, tenor; M. Crabbe and M. Huberdeau, bassos. The men engaged for the chorus are mobilized with the Italian army. The women of the company have asserted that because of their connections abroad they could not sing with war raging in Europe.

MAN JUMPS INTO RIVER

Edward Wooden, 221 South Broadway, last night reported to the police he had seen a man jump into the river from a barge at the foot of Valentine street, about 6:20 p. m.

A dark coat with a gray stripe was found on the barge by the police and a pocket contained a bit of paper on which was written "Aug. Suter, Spruce street, 4-3." The police were unable to find anyone in the vicinity who knew August Suter.

KEEP YOUR DOG WELL AND HAPPY Let Him Have VERMILAX

the wonder working tonic that preserves vim, playfulness and sweet temper.

Summer's heat is hard on dogs. It weakens vitality, aggravates intestinal trouble and disorders caused by worms. Most dogs have worms. Owners do not realize it. VERMILAX searches them out and removes all in 25 to 40 minutes. Worms are usually indicated by vomiting, frothing at the mouth, fits, twitching or dragging on the hind quarters.

"For Your Dog's Sake" get VERMILAX—NOW—and use it regularly. You can then be sure your dog is all right.

By Parcel Post, 50c. and $1.00, or at the Johnson-Enderle-Pauley Drug Co.'s 5 stores in St. Louis and other good druggists.

THE BEREAVED FAMILY.

Card of Thanks.

We wish to extend our sincere thanks to our relatives and friends, Rev. Father Sheehan, choir and Young Ladies' Sodality of St. Bridget's Church, for their respect shown our dear daughter, who Almighty God has seen fit to call upon, namely, Marie L. Duffy; also to Undertaker John Sheehan, Engine Company No. 46, and for the many beautiful tributes; also to the principal, teachers and pupils of Divoll School.

MR. AND MRS. D. J. DUFFY.

In Memoriam.

In loving memory of our dear son and brother, Albert Seitrich, who departed this life Aug. 29, 1912.

Just two years ago you left us.
How we miss you, Albert, dear!
You are gone, but not forgotten
By the ones who loved you here.

Sadly missed by
PARENTS AND SISTERS.

In Memoriam.

In loving remembrance of our dear daughter and sister, Elizabeth Niemeyer, who died Aug. 28, 1913.

You will never be forgotten,
Never shall your memory fade;
Loving thoughts will always linger
'Round the grave where you are laid.

Sadly missed by
MRS. GERTRUDE NIEMEYER AND FAMILY.

In Memoriam.

In sad and loving remembrance of our dear son and brother, Andrew Betzold, who departed this life one year ago, Aug. 26, 1913.

A precious one from us has gone,
The voice we loved is still;
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.

Sadly missed by mother, father, sister and brothers.

In Memoriam.

In loving remembrance of Charlotta Schriefer, who departed this life two years ago, Aug. 28, 1912.

A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled;
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.

Sadly missed by children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

In Memoriam.

We wish to extend our heartfelt thanks to all the relatives and friends for their kind expressions of sympathy, and Rev. O. G. Barth for the comfort and condolence he so kindly offered in our sad bereavement in the loss of my dear husband and our father, Christian Fricke; also for the many floral offerings.

MRS. B. FRICKE AND FAMILY. (c)

In Memoriam.

In loving memory of our dear son and brother, Walter O. Clement, who departed this life July 27, 1914.

You will never be forgotten,
Never shall your memory fade;
Loving thoughts will always linger
'Round the grave where you are laid.

Rest in peace—your cares are ended;
Rest in peace—your work is done.
You are gone and those who love you
Now are coming, one by one.

Sadly missed by
MOTHER, SISTERS AND BROTHER.

In Memoriam.

In memory of our dear mother, Jean Melville Vredenburgh, who departed this life Aug. 28, 1913.

Silently the shades of evening
Gather 'round our lonely door;
Silently they bring before us
That dear, sweet face we see no more.

Silently mother passed away;
From earth to heaven she has taken her flight—
Far from all sorrow, pain and the night,
To the loved ones calling her away.

Silently sweet is her sleep,
Silently for her we weep.
Oh, how we mourn! How sad our hearts!
When from the body the spirit departs.

Silently we laid her to rest,
For God thought it best;
From earth to heaven her loved ones to meet,
And all sanctified angels to greet.

Children—Violet, Walter, Addie;
Grandchildren — Walter, Melville, Alice.

Selling real estate is an advertising problem—for either owner or agent to work out. Some of the real estate advertised today will be sold as a direct result of yesterday's or today's publication of the ads—much of it is likely to be. Yet some of these ads will find buyers only after repeated appearances. Get the greatest amount of publicity for your offers by having them listed in the Post-Dispatch big House, Home and Real Estate Directory.

TO THE AMBITIOUS SALESMAN

Have you ever considered that where there is one subdivision man, you have a hundred piano or life insurance salesmen and perhaps 300 commercial salesmen. Yet a good subdivision man will make two and three times as much as the average salesman— he has more opportunity for advancement. It is the one profitable field that is not crowded. If you think you have more than average ability perhaps we can use your services. Ours is a St. Louis concern—St. Louis capital, having large suburban holdings on the western edge of the city, which are constantly increasing in value. Our best selling season is upon us. Here you can easily earn what your work entitles you to. Our men make from $200 to $400 a month. We will treat your application confidentially. Address Box A-42, Post-Dispatch.

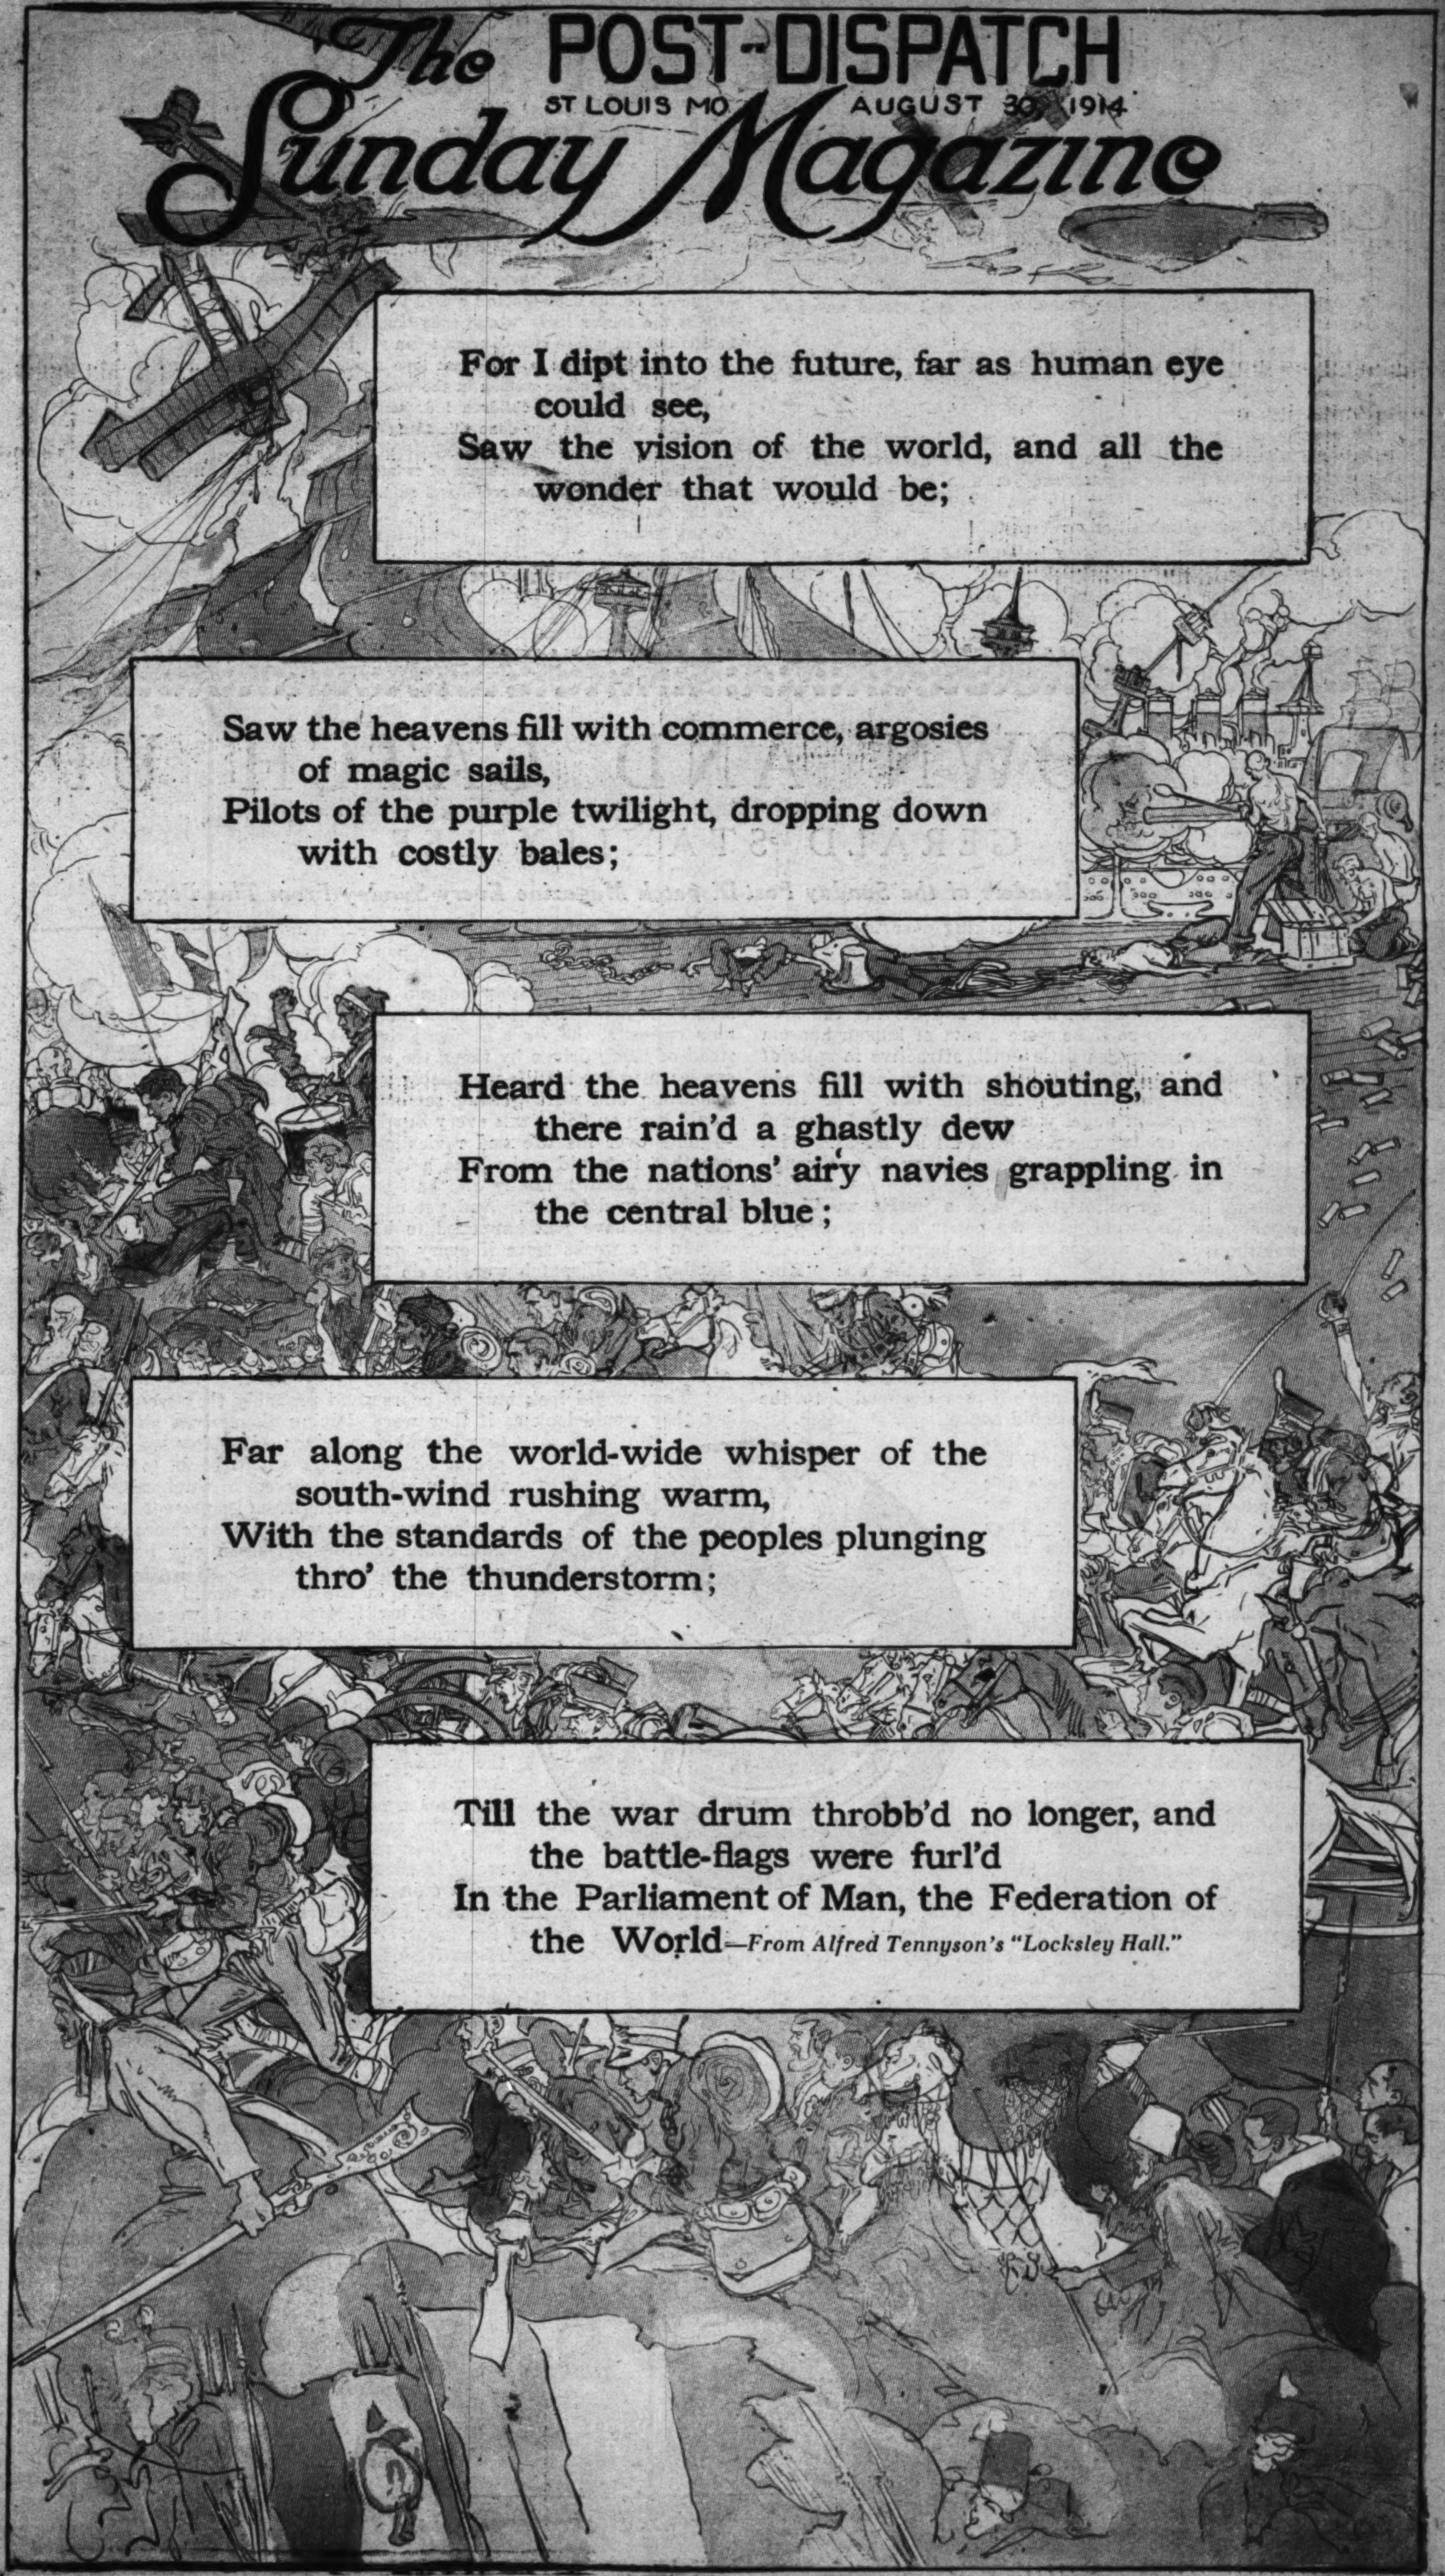
ST LOUIS MO AUGUST 30 1914



For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;

Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;

Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rain'd a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue;

Far along the world-wide whisper of the south-wind rushing warm,
With the standards of the peoples plunging thro' the thunderstorm;

Till the war drum throbb'd no longer, and the battle-flags were furl'd
In the Parliament of Man, the Federation of the World—From Alfred Tennyson's "Locksley Hall."

CONSOLATION

By HARRY KEMP, THE TRAMP POET

CRIED the Father, as they carried the body of his son feet foremost into the house, a victim of the war—
Is this the baby that I danced on my knee,
And is this the boy that used to run to meet me as I came home from work,
Or brought my dinner out into the fields to me, as I rested under the trees!
Is this the youth that worked side by side with me till my heart leaped glad with the thought that I had indeed begotten a man worthy to inherit my place after me!

Cried the Mother, lifting her apron to her eyes, and weeping—
Is this the babe whose little bones and flesh grew as part of me,
Whom I brought forth with anguish and yet with great joy at having given birth to a man!
Is this the child that I suckled at my breasts,
Is this the little one that stumbled in walking and held himself up by clutching at my skirts!
Is this the grown man in whom I took such pride,
Expecting to have him by my side and by the side of his Father as we grew old—
Oh, what is this that you are bringing us?

Cried the Sweetheart, shaken and stunned, and horribly white,
As she sat on the doorstep and buried her face in her hands—
Is this the tender lover whose eyes laughed into mine,
Is this the lad whose strong arms I can yet feel about me,
And could this be he whose great love made my heart glad beyond the heart of any other woman in the world!
Is this the man whose children I dreamed of bringing forth!
Dear God, why have you done this thing with me?

Then the men who bore the mass of twisted bone and broken flesh set the stretcher down in the room, and said, as they filed away—
To the Father.
To the Mother:
To the Sweetheart:
Be of good cheer, we pray you—for did not the young man die for his country?

SLOW DOWN AND CATCH UP!

By GERALD STANLEY LEE

Mr. Lee Addresses the Readers of the Sunday Post-Dispatch Magazine Every Sunday From This Page.

THE other day in the train, looking over the shoulder of a fellow passenger, I saw a big picture of an anxious, headlong-looking man, his eyes on the road in front of him, hurrying hopelessly. Perched up behind him, sitting on his neck and driving the man with a whip as if he were a sort of human hansom cab sat a smartish little devil, attractive in spite of himself—looked like a little angel in fact, who had somehow got turned wrong-side out. The little wrong-side-out angel was very earnest and cheerful and was thrashing his whip around the man with all his might. With this picture were one or two others, and, squirming along down through the pictures as well as it could, ran an editorial.

I was just wondering how an editorial in such a jungle would get itself through, when the man that went with the paper got up, dropped it in the seat and left the train. I reached over and helped myself.

It was an editorial that ought to have been called at the top: "Hurry and You'll Be Happy!"

The general idea was that if you didn't hurry as much as other people did, and if you didn't keep up, you wouldn't have anything to eat and nobody would love you, and you wouldn't have any position or respect—the editorial said, and, well, after all, being driven by that merciless little angel up on one's neck until one's bones dropped into the grave was as much happiness as any one could expect.

I agree in a way to the general doctrine that one must keep up with people to be happy. If the people who attend to making us happy are going to attend to it, we must be on the premises for them to attend to it. We must be there. They naturally cannot make us happy 40 miles back. And of course if we are going to make other people happy, we must be there. The point on which I disagree with the writer of the editorial is how to get there.

It seems to me that nine out of ten of our people today do not get there because they hurry. They've got to sit down and think to catch up. Less leg work and more looking is what gets people ahead in America today. While we are hurrying, some man who thinks and who sees we are hurrying entirely the wrong way—hurrying backward in fact—slips in ahead of us. The men today who are stopping and thinking and putting things together, and thinking what comes next before they let it come, are the men we can see all about us in American life, making things come the way they want them to and getting control of the rest of us.

It is the men who stop hurrying and think who hire us. We don't hire them. When we think of a thing we find that they have thought of it. They thought of it while we were hurrying.

The worst of it is the more we hurry the more we have to. The more a man hurries the more people he has to compete with. Thinking is a comparatively lonely, roomy job. Very few people are on it. The more a man thinks the fewer people he finds to compete with.

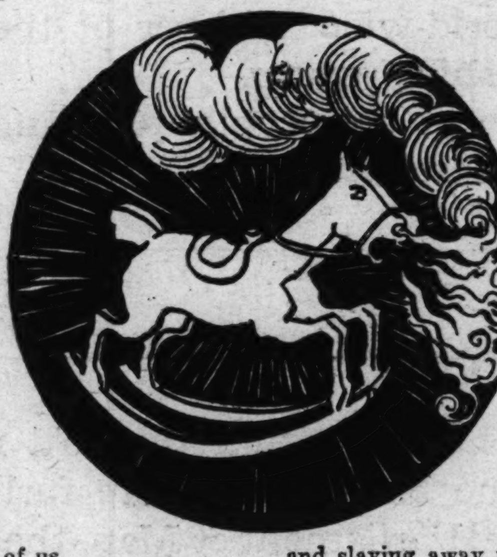
Anybody can see how this is working out, if he looks about him at business and at men of affairs. It is the leg work that is getting crowded. It is getting harder and harder every day to get one's legs in ahead of other people's legs. Our only chance lies in seeing and taking time to see that it is not the quantity of motions a man can make in a day but the way his motions count and what his motions mean that get him on—get him on in the true sense, add to the abundance, well-being and power of life.

Anybody can sweat. Less sweat on the outside of our brows and more inside is the way to hurry now. The way to get on today in America is to keep one's head cool and think. It's being driven that keeps one behind.

If every reader of the Sunday Post-Dispatch this Sunday morning or afternoon were to sit down after reading this column, with a pen and a piece of paper (large sheet) and put down in one column the things he is being driven by and in another column opposite the reasons he is being driven by them, and in a third column opposite, the ways he can drive the things instead of being driven by them, the ways in which he can learn to live his life reasonably and as if it meant something and were getting somewhere; and if he would keep on doing this every Sunday for six weeks—going over his life and reviewing it and clearing it up, I venture to say that it would make such a difference in his life and even in his face that his own family and half the people he met would wonder what had happened to him. And yet nothing would have happened to him. He would have just happened to himself.

In six weeks more if every one of the 320,000 subscribers of the Sunday Post-Dispatch were to do this half an hour every Sunday—were to sit down and have a good practical pointed itemized think—make at least one weekly clearheaded streak across life, the time would soon come when in going up and down the streets anybody would know a Sunday Post-Dispatch subscriber at sight. One would pick out hundreds of Sunday Post-Dispatch subscribers every block.

They would look busy of course and probably they would be quick, but they would look as if they were driving themselves and not as if they were being driven. In a few months, 500,000 people all doing this, would begin to have a profound effect on the streets of St. Louis. The city would get some relief from its present strained and anxious look, and when a man comes down from Booneville or from Jefferson city he would feel cheered up about St. Louis. At least 500,000 people he met in the streets would look as if they were driving themselves and were going where they wanted to go, and knew what they were about. The little wrong-side-out angel up on people's necks would have lost 500,000 jobs.



* * * * * * *

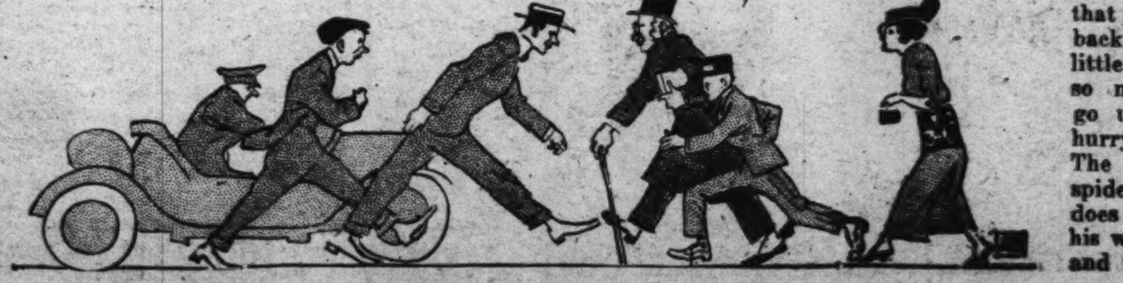
The three great outstanding facts or symbols that sum up St. Louis life today may be said to be the rocking chair, chewing gum, and our new American disease—superleggyitis. It is the men and women in St. Louis who are too lazy to keep still, who cannot and will not make the effort to keep their mouths from going without anything really in them, and their legs from going without really going anywhere, and their backs from toiling and slaving away making their easy chairs work, who make both the work and the play of the great city so full of weariness. 320,000 Sunday Post-Dispatch subscribers fresh from their Sunday thinks let loose on the streets of St. Louis every Monday morning would be a gladsome sight.

But of course it's not only in St. Louis.

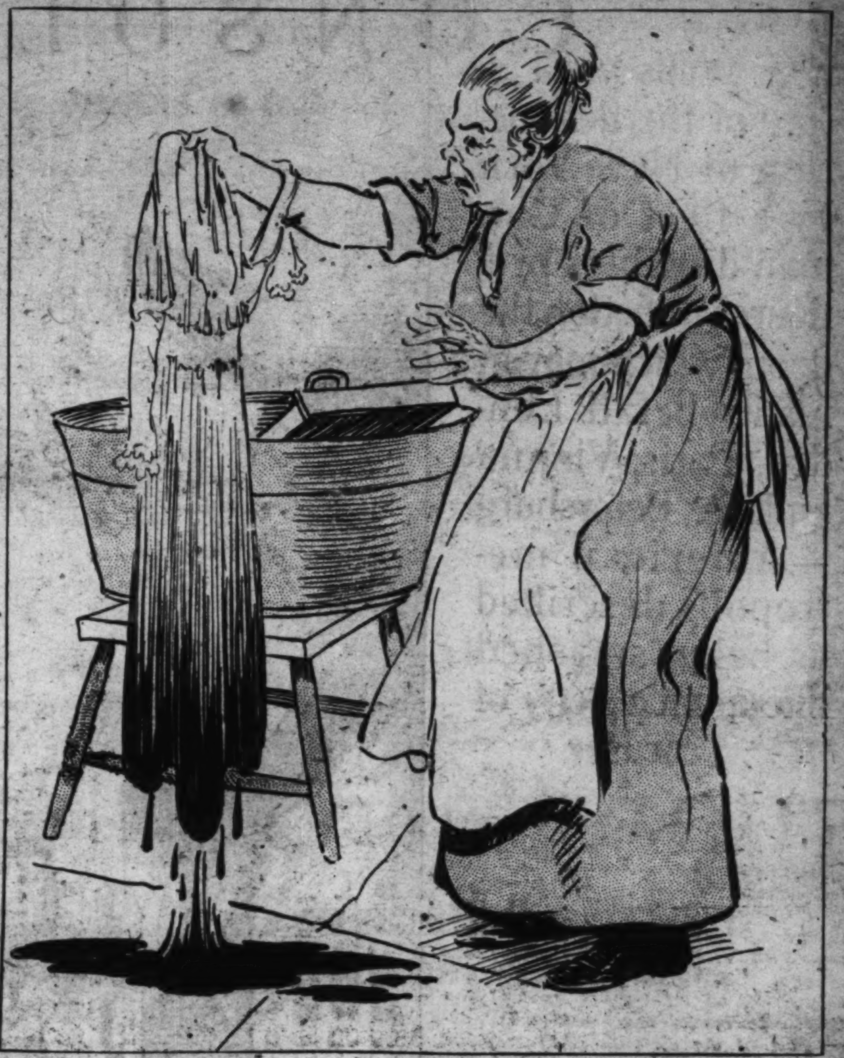
If I were an artist and wanted to make a picture of what the average American looks like it would be a picture of a terrible, wonderful, fast and furious rocking horse with fire in his nostrils. A woman in a rocker is expressing herself in practically the same way. She sways back and forth the story of her life; and what is the girl in the subway with her chewing gum doing. It's her autobiography she is doing, dear child!

Alas! how I feel that I know her. I feel a little more sure of her every chew. Often I let my eyes follow her furtively over my paper, chewing her way up from Broadway to Cabanne.

Even our little children hurry and our grandmothers cannot stop. This is the main thing in our American life today that is holding people back. It was not so a little while ago. But it is so now. Slaves always go under and slaves of hurry go under faster. The flies hurry into the spider's net. The spider does not hurry. He does his work and then he sits and thinks.



WHAT WILL THE WAR COST AMERICAN BUSINESS?



"Color not Guaranteed."

MERCHANTS foresee at first a sharp increase in prices of necessities, and then an era of prosperity for the United States ✤ European demand for foodstuffs to cause rise in cost of living, but cotton goods and shoes will show decline in price ✤ Opportunity for American inventors to duplicate industrial processes now known only abroad . . . .

"Poor little ignorant thing!" remarked Mrs. J. about the young woman who had just tripped along in front of the Brownsmere apartments. "She's wearing white stockings with black shoes and a purple skirt!"

"Yes," Mrs. K. murmured, "and isn't that the funniest purple you ever saw! It looks spotted and faded!"

"And what a scrambled pink on her hat!"

"And what a hideous shade for the girdle!"

SUCH, Messieurs and Mesdames, are the horrors of war. This conversation is prophetic. It hasn't taken place yet, but it is likely to take place before very long, unless something unexpected arises to alleviate the situation. Mrs. J. and Mrs. K. need not feel so superior to the young maid with the off-color clothes, for they may be wearing similar mis-assorted garments themselves before long.

Because Great Britain and Germany and France and Russia, and all the rest of them, are at war, American women face the appalling prospect of having to wear wash dresses which will not wash except to the great damage of the colors. For, be it known, the only genuine waterproof andanthrene dyes yet discovered are made in Germany by secret process as yet unknown to the rest of the world. All other dyes will fade, more or less swiftly. American inventors have discovered pretty fair black and blue dyes, but even these are not equal to the German product.

Sooner or later, of course, the American chemist will rise to the emergency. But he hasn't done it yet, and, while he is striving to master the secret our available stock of unfadeable wash goods is rapidly becoming exhausted. The manager of one of the largest wholesale dry goods houses in the West recently said that when he is no longer able to get stuff colored with German andanthrene dyes, he expects to stamp upon every bolt of goods that goes out of his place the words: "COLOR NOT GUARANTEED."

Obviously, the first result of such a situation will be a rapid rise in prices demanded for goods in waterproof colors. In other words, it begins to look as if the High Cost of Living were to be tilted once more. Nor will the ladies suffer alone. Many a man whose heart has been beating proudly under the harmonious hues of his newest shirts, will find that same heart losing a stroke or two when, for the first time, the shirt comes back from the laundry!

Unfortunately for the ultimate consumer, what is happening in the matter of wash goods seems bound to happen with many other things that have come to be considered necessities of life. So many things are imported from abroad every year that the unexpected elimination of the imports has brought about a business crisis.

Almost as soon as war had been declared, wholesalers descended in hordes upon the stocks of importers and swept them clean. The shrewdest business men confessed themselves unable to foretell the immediate commercial future, and all of them bought as much and as early as they could.

They had the gloomiest misgivings. Even if ocean traffic should not be seriously affected, the foreign Governments had filled their armies with artisans, thereby paralyzing industry and shutting off the sources of supply.

A Chance for Inventors

HERE are some of the things toward which the present European war will stir American enterprise:

Invention of a waterproof andanthrene dye as good as that of Germany;

Manufacture of woolen cloths as good as those of Great Britain;

Manufacture of delicate mechanical tools as good as those of France;

Manufacture of mechanical toys;

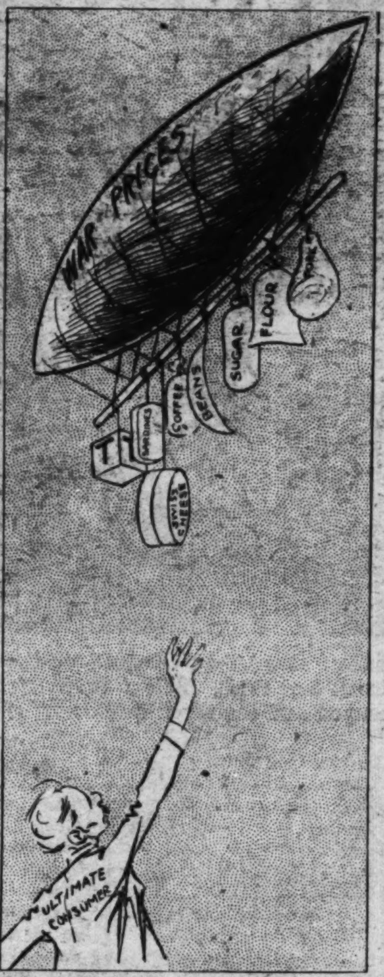
Manufacture of the finest grades of kid gloves;

Manufacture of fine laces and linens;

Manufacture of embroidery cotton, napkins and handkerchiefs;

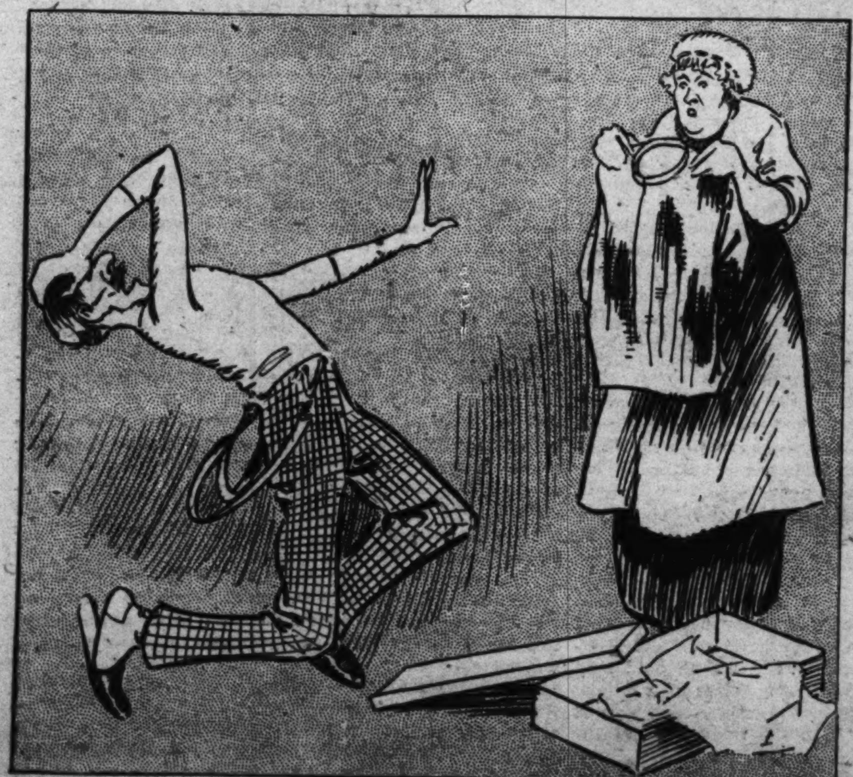
Manufacture of beads and cheap jewelry;

Establishment of a merchant marine to the lion's share of the world's commerce.



The first few days of the European war saw a marked rise in the prices of table articles.

His heart will lose a stroke or two when, for the first time, the shirt comes back from the laundry.



Great quantities of raw material annually sent abroad to be worked into fabrics would remain in America, to await such time as American manufacturers would be able to handle it. What could this mean but a general rise in prices?

Even after the war is over, many of them argued, cessation of hostilities would not immediately ameliorate conditions. They declared that the people abroad would be too poor to buy anything except what was positively necessary. And it would take years for their manufacturers to get back anything like their former business.

In the long run, these dealers believed, the thing would be of vast benefit to the United States. Deprived of desired articles from abroad, American manufacturers would make the things themselves. Sooner or later this would mean for the American people a commercial supremacy it has never yet attained. But all that takes time and in the meanwhile—the stock of andanthrene dyes is running out!

All these things may be true, but, on the other hand, a careful examination of the facts reveals that there are relatively few necessities for which America is dependent upon foreign producers.

By necessities is not meant the bare means of preserving life, but also of the domestic comforts which are the established requisites of the average American home.

Among these may be included clothing, hats, underwear, gloves, hosiery, shoes, meats, breadstuffs, condiments, furniture, carpets, coffee, tea and sugar.

A St. Louis wholesaler is authority for the statement that with the exception of coffee and tea practically all of these things are produced in such abundance at home as to supply all the requirements of the United States.

Our principal European imports he declares, are linens, fine gloves, laces embroideries, velvet ribbons, napkins, fine handkerchiefs, embroidery cotton, dolls, toys, buttons, "fancy notions," beads, cheap jewelry, chains, mechanical tools, etc.

About 90 per cent of the carpets used in this country are made in the United States, he says, even though dealers may often label them "imported." Practically the only foreign carpetings that are imported nowadays are Oriental rugs. Oriental rugs could scarcely be classed among the "necessities."

Most of our men's and women's hats also are made in the United States. While much of the trimming material may be brought here from Europe, enough of it is made in this country to satisfy all reasonable demands. As for underclothing and hosiery, the importations are insignificant.

As every St Louisan knows, the United States virtually supplies the civilized world with shoes.

Practically all our furniture is made at home.

We consume our own meats and grow enough corn and wheat and barley and rye to furnish all the breadstuffs we demand.

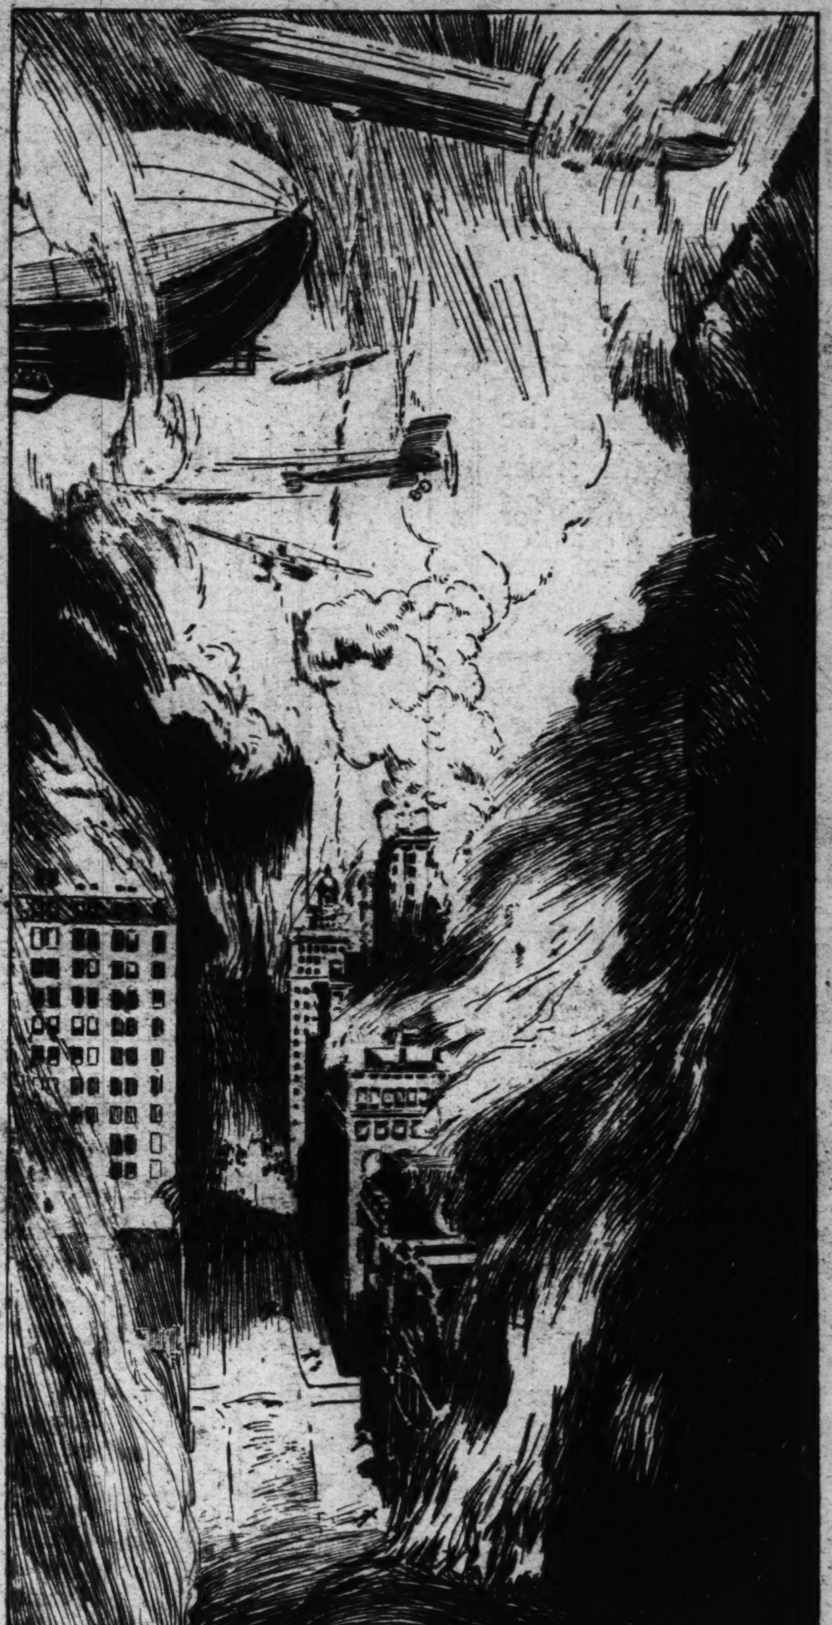
The Air's Menace to the Capitals of Europe

H. G. Wells' vivid picture of the destruction of New York by a fleet of German dirigibles prefigures in fiction the doom which may in reality befall London, Paris, Vienna and St. Petersburg—American metropolis described as being smashed like a child's city of cards.

THE colossal possibilities of destruction embodied in the aerial engines of war, dirigible and aeroplane, now undergoing their first test on a grand scale, form the subject of H. G. Wells' prophetic novel, "The War in the Air" (Macmillan). His fanciful description of the demolition of the city of New York by a fleet of German airships may be taken as a type of the titanic powers of havoc which the developers of the dirigible and aeroplane hope they will be able to exert in the present European war. It foreshadows what may happen to London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna or St. Petersburg.

In the vivid excerpts given below, the Prince is Karl Albert, son of the Kaiser and called "the German Alexander." Kurt is Air-Lieutenant Kurt of the German aeronautic marines. Bert is Bert Smallways, a London cockney who, by a weird sequence of adventures, finds himself aboard the "Vaterland," the flagship of the German sky fleet, on the voyage of invasion in which the American naval fleet of the North Atlantic is destroyed by the German airships—a battle which at a stroke makes ironclads obsolete as the engagement between the Monitor and Merrimac was the death knell of wooden battleships.

"THE German fleet reached New York in advance of the news of the American naval disaster," the narrative proceeds. "It reached New York in the late afternoon and was first seen by watchers at Ocean Grove and Long Branch, coming swiftly out of the southward sea and going away to the northwest. The flagship passed vertically over the Sandy Hook observation station, rising rapidly as it did so, and in a few minutes all New York was vibrating to the Staten Island guns.



"As the airships sailed along they smashed up the city as a child will shatter its cities of brick and card. Below they left ruins and blazing conflagrations and heaped and scattered dead."

"Several of these guns, and especially that at Giffords and the one on Beacon Hill, above Matteawan, were remarkably well handled. The former, at distance of five miles, and with an elevation of 6000 feet, sent a shell to burst so close to the Vaterland that a pane of the Prince's forward window was smashed by a fragment.

"The whole air fleet immediately went up steeply to a height of about 12,000 feet, and at that level passed unscathed over the ineffectual guns. The airships lined out as they moved forward into the form of a flattened V, with its apex toward the city, and with the flagship going highest at the apex. The two ends of the V passed over Plumfield and Jamaica Bay respectively, and the Prince directed his course a little to the east of the Narrows, soared over the Upper Bay and came to rest above Jersey City, in a position that dominated lower New York. There the monsters hung, large and wonderful in the evening light, serenely regardless of the occasional rocket explosions and flashing shell bursts in the lower air."

"No city in the world," is the author's tribute, "was ever so finely placed as New York, so magnificently cut up by sea and bluff and river, so admirably disposed to display the tall effects of buildings, the complex immensities of bridges and mono-railways and feats of engineering. London, Paris, Berlin were shapeless, low agglomerations beside it. Its port reached to its heart, like Venice, and, like Venice, it was obvious, dramatic and proud. Seen from above it was alive with crawling trains and cars, and at a thousand points it was already breaking into quivering light. New York was altogether at its best that evening, its splendid best."

Washington advised New York to surrender, but the city officials refused. There were unsatisfactory wireless communications between the Vaterland and the city hall. Then:

"Down through the twilight sank five attacking warships, one to the Navy Yard on East River, one to the city hall, two over the great business buildings of Wall street and lower Broadway, one to the Brooklyn Bridge. At that descent all the cars in the streets stopped with dramatic suddenness, and all the lights that had been coming on in the streets and houses went out again. A chill of apprehension ran through the city. * * *

"The first loss of life occurred in the panic rush from Brooklyn Bridge as the airship approached it.

"Then, in the expectant hush came a great crash and uproar, the breaking down of the Brooklyn Bridge, the rifle fire from the Navy Yard and the bursting of bombs in Wall street and the city hall. New York as a whole could do nothing, could understand nothing. New York in the darkness peered and listened to these distant sounds, until presently they died away as suddenly as they had begun.

"A long, vague period intervened, and people looking out of windows of upper rooms discovered the dark hulls of German airships gliding slowly and noiselessly, quite close at hand. Then quietly the electric lights came on again, and an uproar of nocturnal newsvenders began in the streets.

"The units of that vast and varied population bought and learned what had happened; there had been a fight and New York had hoisted the white flag." It proved that the officials had agreed to pay the enormous ransom of $40,000,000. The city hall, the Courthouse and the Postoffice were a blackened heap of ruins, and in the Postoffice a multitude of workers, including many women and girls, had lost their lives.

When these facts became known, the city began to hum like a hive of angry bees. Orators proclaimed that the city had been betrayed by its officials. Suddenly New York discovered herself, with amazement giving place to wrath unspeakable, a conquered city under the hand of the conqueror. Before day broke swift American anger was running through all the city, through every soul in those contagious millions.

In the morning, in denial of the white flag floating over the improvised city hall in Park Row, hundreds of American flags were unfurled from the tops of buildings and homes. From an apartment house on Riverside drive a volley was fired upon a German airship hovering in the vicinity of Columbia University. A party of young clubmen slipped away to Beacon Hill in motor cars and manned a swivel gun there, and before a bomb smashed them and their gun to bits, succeeded in bringing the airship Bingen to earth, disabled, upon Staten Island. A mob attacked its crew and succeeded in capturing the gasbag and killing all of its defenders, but other airships went to the rescue and with grenades demolished every villa in a radius of a mile.

At night a crowd of patriotic spirits seized a gun at Union Square and elevated it to the tenth floor of the Dexter Building. The next day, when the airship Wetterborn was lying above the square, they loosed two shells, which raked the dirigible from stem to stern.

"They smashed her exhaustively," the story continues. "She crumpled up like a can that has been kicked by a heavy boot, her forepart came down in the square and the rest of her length, with a great snapping and twisting of shafts and stays, descended, collapsing athwart Tammany Hall and the streets towards Second avenue. Her gas escaped to mix with air, and the air of her rent balloonette poured into her deflating gas chambers. Then, with an immense impact, she exploded.

"The Vaterland at that time was beating up to the south of city hall from over the ruins of the Brooklyn Bridge, and the reports of the gun brought Kurt and Smallways to the cabin porthole. They were in time to see the flash of the exploding gun, and then they were first flattened against the window and then rolled head over heels across the floor of the cabin by the air wave of the explosion. The Vaterland bounded like a football someone has kicked. * * * Bert had a momentary impression of the great figure of the Prince, white with rage, bristling with gigantic anger, his huge fist swinging. 'Blut und Eisen!' cried the Prince, as one who swears. 'Oh, Blut and Eisen!' "

"New York," the author proceeds, telling of the Prince's vengeance, "was the first of the great cities of the Scientific Age to suffer by the enormous powers and grotesque limitation of aerial warfare. She was wrecked as in the previous century endless barbaric cities had been bombarded, because she was at once too strong to be occupied and too undisciplined and proud to surrender in order to escape destruction.

"In spite of his intense exasperation with the dilemma, the Prince sought to be moderate even in massacre. For that night he proposed only the wrecking of Broadway. He directed the arships to move in column over the route of this thoroughfare, dropping bombs, the Vaterland leading. And so our Bert Smallways became a participant in one of the most cold-blooded slaughters in the world's history, in which men who were neither excited nor, except for the remotest chance of a bullet, in any danger, poured death and destruction upon homes and crowds below.

"He clung to the frame of the porthole as the airship tossed and swayed, and stared down through the light rain that now drove before the wind, watching buildings collapse and fires begin. As the airships sailed along they smashed up the city as a child will shatter its cities of brick and card. Below they left ruins and blazing conflagrations and heaped and scattered dead; men, women and children mixed together as though they had been no more than Moors or Zulus or Chinese.

"Lower New York was soon a furnace of crimson flames, from which there was no escape. Cars, railways, ferries, all had ceased, and never a light lit the way of the distracted fugitives in that dusky confusion but the light of burning. * * *

"And then, above the flames of Manhattan Island, came a battle, the first battle of the air. The Americans had realized the price their waiting game must cost, and struck with all the strength they had, if haply they might still save New York from this mad Prince of Blood and Iron, and from fire and death.

"They came down upon the Germans on the wings of a great gale in the twilight, amidst thunder and rain. They came from the yards of Washington and Philadelphia, full tilt, in two squadrons, and but for one sentinel airship hard by Trenton, the surprise would have been complete.

"The Germans, sick and weary with destruction and half empty of ammunition, were facing up into the weather when the news of this onset reached them. New York they had left behind to the southeastward, a darkened city, with one hideous red scar of flames.

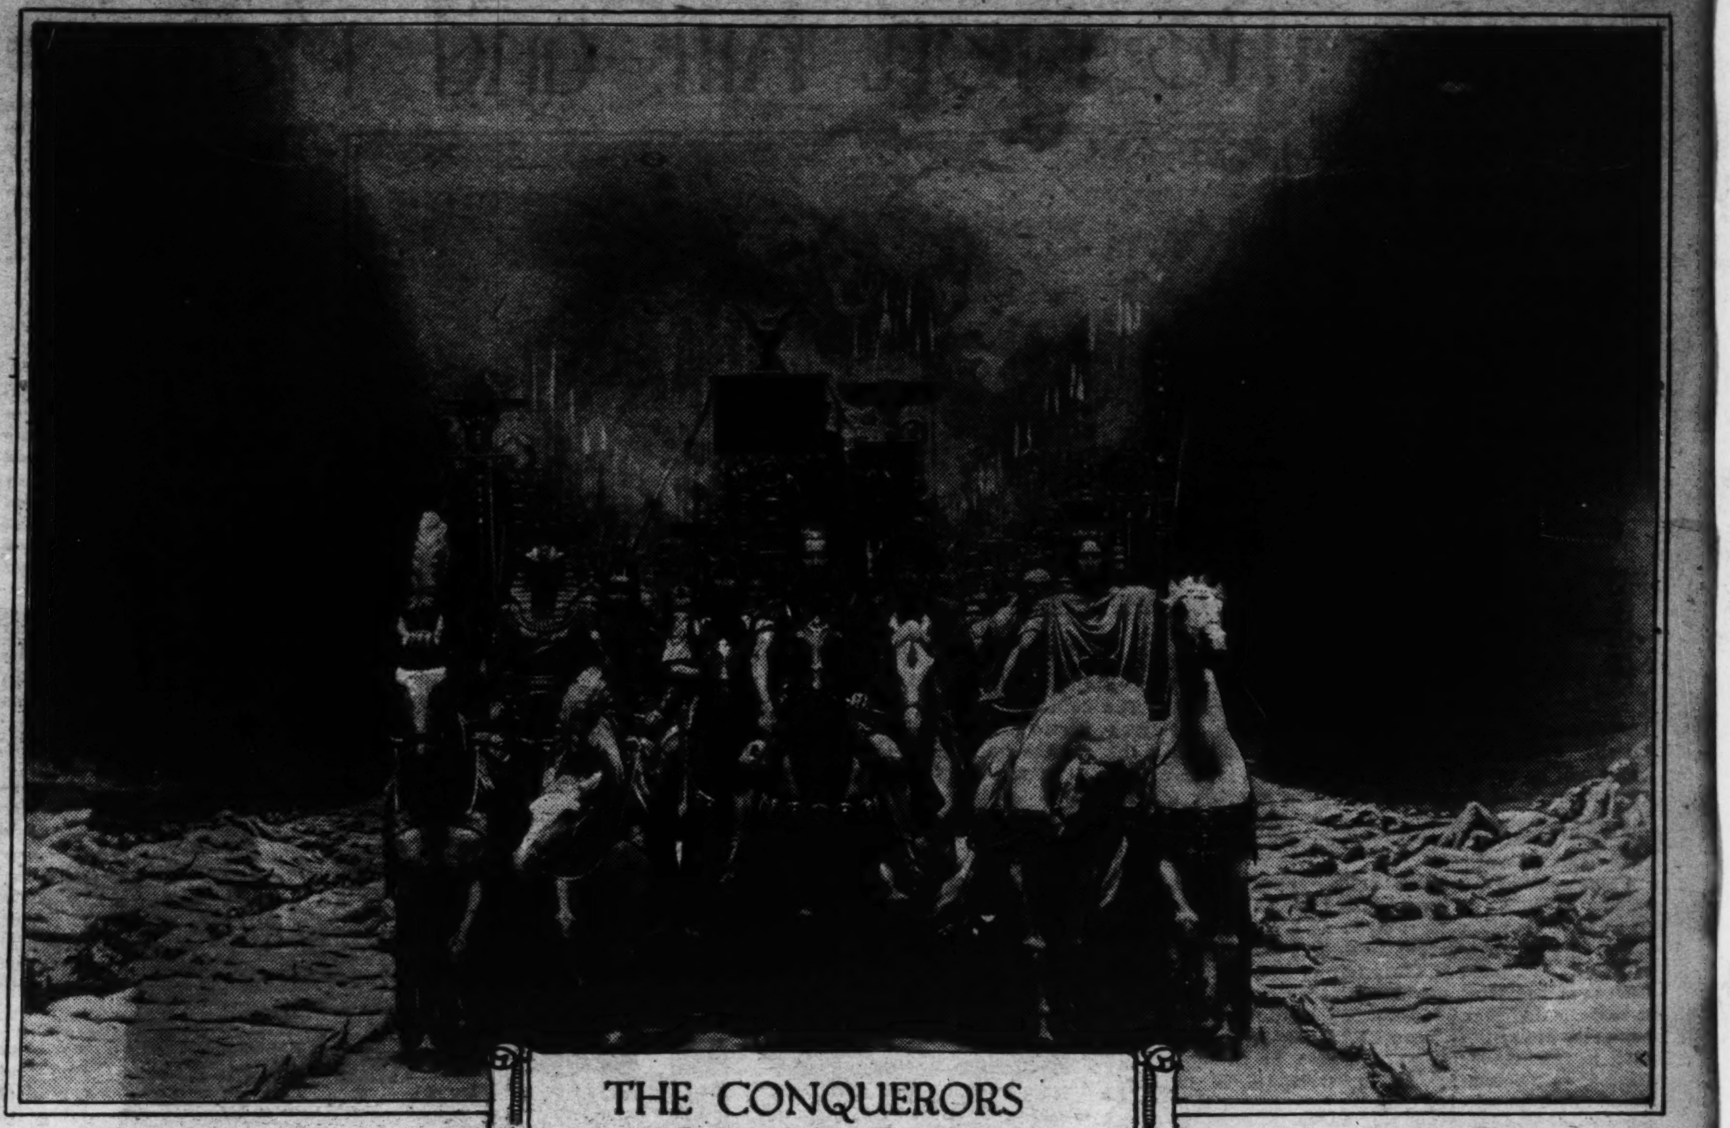
"All the airships rolled and staggered, bursts of hailstorm bore them down and forced them to fight their way up again; the air had become bitterly cold. The Prince was on the point of giving orders to drop earthward and trail copper lightning rods when the news of the aeroplane attack came to him. He faced his fleet in line abreast south, had the drachenflieger manned and held ready to cast loose, and ordered a general ascent into the freezing clearness above the wet and darkness."

Smallways witnessed the charge of the American planes, saw the same bolt of lighting strike both an aeroplane and a German dirigible and send them reeling in flames to earth. The Vaterland fought a duel with two circling aeroplanes, which shot her rearmost chambers through. She fought them off with explosive bullets and turned to run.

With heroic dash and self-sacrifice, an aeroplane rammed the Vaterland and for some moments she hung on the verge of destruction, sinking swiftly, with the American aeroplane entangled with her smashed propeller, the Americans trying to scramble aboard. The plane dropped off at last, and the Vaterland took a hideous leap upwards.

"The Vaterland was no longer fighting the gale; her smashed and exploded engines throbbed no more; she was disabled and driving before the wind as smoothly as a balloon, a huge, windspread, tattered cloud of aerial wreckage."

The Prince and his dirigible, rushing northward with the storm, came to earth on Labrador, whence he and his men escaped in time to become allies of the United States and Europe against an invasion of the yellow faces from China and Japan, in a world-war which turned the earth into a wilderness and an adobe of savages.



THE CONQUERORS

"The Human Slaughter-House"

German schoolmaster's book visualizing the ghastliness of machine gun warfare and prophetic of the horrors of the present European war, persistently read in fatherland in spite of veto of military authorities ❧ Author loses job and is called traitor

MUSIC! Mad, intoxicating music! Music that rouses, stirs, grips and inflames! Surely music can obliterate the memory of a BOOK. But can it? All the bands in Germany, where the book was written, have been making the attempt. Hundreds of thousands of soldiers have been listening to their wild appeal. But the same hundreds of thousands have read the book. And such a book:

It was written by a German schoolmaster, too. Written by one of those Social Democratic agitators, it would have been bad enough. But to think of its being written by Herr Wilhelm Lamszus, actually a State official, who had the education of thousands of embryo soldiers entrusted to his care! The rage of the Government and of all those who confound militarism with patriotism knew no bounds.

The book was at once interdicted in Hamburg, where it first appeared, and Herr Lamszus suddenly lost his job. Every vile name, from "Traitor" to "Snake" was thrown at him; and he was condemned at the court of jingoist opinion as "An imported alien draining the marrow of the Empire's patriotic backbone."

And all this, instead of killing the book, advertised it. It was scarcely off the press before three hundred thousand copies had been sold. Edition after edition appeared and translation after translation. Everybody seemed to be soaking it in; not only in Germany, but in all the other countries where human beings were beginning to think of themselves as human beings and not merely as so much fighting power.

This book didn't breath a word again the Government. And it wasn't a tirade against war. Nobody pays any attention to tirades. This book was a simple PICTURE of war; not as it was in the past, but as, with the introduction of modern war machinery, it must inevitably be. "Menschenschlachthaus," he called it—"The Human Slaughter-House"

And then, while the book was still red hot, came the sudden declaration of a state of war. And the reserves came out under orders, but in a different mood than reserves had ever shown. "Menschenschlachthaus!" thousands of them were muttering. And the word was passed to the musicians that they must play as they had never played.

Music versus Memory! The music was sending out its call to glorious war. The book called war by a most inglorious name—Menschenschlachthaus! Who ever heard of a glorious slaughter house?

The music was telling the soldiers that they might die like patriots. The book was telling them that they would die like vermin.

The music was urging brave men to go out and meet brave men. The book was telling them that they would meet machines; that a regiment of strong-hearted husbands and fathers would charge with bared breast across the plain, to be blown to death or to agonized fragments that will not die—only to capture at last some hideously mangled boy operating a single piece of cold mechanism.

"Lay on!" said the book, picturing the glorious "victory." "A lad, a mere boy, is sprawling over and clutching his abandoned gun. * * * with an oath someone dashes at him, his face all distorted by rage * * * the boy stretches out a mangled hand to ward him off, his lower jaw is waggling but his mouth remains voiceless. * * * The next moment the fixed bayonet plunges into his chest * * * first his right, then his shattered left hand seizes the blade as if in his death throes he were trying to pluck it out of his heart; so he clings tightly to the bayonet * * * a thrust! a recovery! * * * a bright, leaping jet follows the steel * * * and heart and breath gasp their last among the dead leaves. * * *

'All round men are lying slain on the brown carpet of the woods. But the machines are still alive, and rage against the machines fires the blood and consumes the flesh * * * Up with the trenching tools! * * * with axes upraised they rush at the machines, and hail blows upon the barrels. The retorts wherein Death has brewed his potion shriek as though wounded * * * the jackets burst * * * the water flows out * * * and the carriage leaps splintered into the air * * * twisted metal.

"This is the soldier's frenzy and the joy of battle: to charge with bared breast against planted steel. In such wholesale, callous, purposeful fashion vermin only are slaughtered."

This is the picture of war on which half of the German army has been gazing for a year. It is a picture which the War Lords never meant them to see—until the trap was sprung on the actual battlefield and the trapped and tortured human animals could be depended upon to act as only trapped and tortured animals do. Until then—music and shouts for the Fatherland and the immortal glory of war.

That was the crime of the book. That was its treason: painting war as it is, instead of as the music makes it out to be. Picturing a regiment, for instance, finding an impassable swamp ahead and deciding to retrace its steps when its range is found by the enemy's shells and Death begins to do its worst.

"Back! Get back!

"But everyone has ceased to be conscious of what he is doing. And though our eyes start out of our head at the terror we see in front of us, Death is bringing its cold breath into the back of our neck.

"And into the gurgling water, wriggling with bodies and alive with lungs, over human bodies writhing beneath the water, Death tramples us to the other bank. Any man who goes down is lost, for they are pressing on behind us past all holding. * * * The bottom may clutch at us and cling round our feet * * * The water may bite savagely at us with TEETH and with NAILS. But whatever may be trying to draw us down to itself from below, we trample underfoot. The shoulders of a form emerge; they plunge down again, and disappear. The faces of drowning men emerge and cleave to the light, and sink gurgling into the depths. Lost arms wave about in the air and try to find support on the surface of the water. We dodge these arms, for whomever they may seize they draw down with them to death.

"And in the thick of this hurly-burly of death, amid these whistling lungs, amid these panting, red, panic-stricken faces, the cloud of shells strikes home. Explosions and screams and the hissing of lead, and the shrieks of men, and blood and water foam up, till no one knows whether he has been hit or is still alive; for in front of me—so close that I could clutch it—I see a jugular vein, ripped through, spurting in an arch like a fountain—and in his blood the fellow hit staggers back, and blood and howls surfeit the black flood."

But when the panic is with the enemy! Herr Lamszus did not forget to picture that. If he had not pictured it, in fact, perhaps all the rest of the book could have been forgiven. This is the picture, after the army has fallen back, with orders to shoot only in the air in case of an attack, as a great field over which the enemy is expected has been painstakingly mined.

"Look there * * * over there the cheer rings out * * * the signals for assault sound and thousands of voices are shouting it simultaneously * * * there they are foaming up * * * they are charging on drunk with victory and closed ranks * * * they are rolling with a roar over the mined field * * * they are trampling the earth as if with horses' hoofs * * * that means death * * * I am lying rigid * * * now it must break, now * * * I open my mouth wide * * * my rifle is trembling in my grasp * * *

"And then——

"The earth has opened her mouth * * * Lightnings, crashes and thunderings, and the Heaven splits in twain and falls down in flame—the earth whirls upwards in shreds * * * men and the earth blaze and hurtle through the air like catherine wheels * * * and then * * * a crash, a maddening uproar, strikes us full in the chest, so that we reel backward to the ground, and half-consciously struggle for breath in the sand * * * and now * * * the storm is over * * * the pressure of the atmosphere relaxes off our chest * * * we breathe deep * * * only scattered, dancing flames now and squibs * * * fireworks * * *

"But what on earth has happened?——

"We peer out fearfully over our earthworks.

"Has red Hell opened its mouth?

"There rises a noise of screams and yells, an uproar so unnaturally wild and unrestrained that we cringe up closer to one another * * * and, trembling, we see that our faces, our uniforms, have red, wet stains, and distinctly recognize shreds of flesh on the cloth. And among our feet something is lying that was not lying there before—it gleams white from the dark sand and uncurls * * * a strange, dismembered hand * * * and there * * * and there * * * fragments of flesh with the uniforms still adhering to them —then we realize it, and horror overwhelms us.

'Outside there are lying arms, legs, heads, trunks * * * they are howling into the night; the whole regiment is lying mangled on the ground there, a lump of humanity crying to Heaven.

"Clouds are arising from the earth * * * they are rising crying aloud in the air * * * they pass over us in thick drifts, so that we can see the wounds steaming, and can taste blood and bones upon our tongues * * *

"And then a spectral vision rises before my eyes * * * I see Red Death standing outside there on the plain * * * the clouds reveal a face grinning down on the symphony * * * and suddenly a clear note detaches itself from the darkness * * * a tune which enraptured Death is playing to himself till his fiddle splits * * * is that a human being coming

While the Men Kill and Maim—

The women are mobilizing in the fields and vineyards of Europe to harvest the crops upon which the very existence of the huge Continental armies depends

They must stop the vast gap made in the ranks of the army of industry by the summons of 17,000,000 workers to war

The woman laborer on German farms.

PRESIDENT POINCARE has summoned the women of France to the defense of the nation. But the feminine mobilization will not occur in Belgium or along the Alsatian frontier. The women's army is not called to work of death and devastation. According to the eternal role of woman, its tasks will be those of peace, of the conservation of life. By hundreds of thousands they are stepping forward into the ranks vacated by men under the stress of war—into the ranks of productive industry in the nation's fields and vineyards.

Poincare's proclamation calling upon the patriotic women of France to harvest the nation's crops is merely an official statement recognizing a condition existing in all of the warring countries. In each of them hosts of able-bodied men, in the prime of life, have suddenly been snatched from productive occupations. In Russia it is estimated that 5,500,000 men are now, or soon will be, under arms; in Germany, 5,200,000; in France, 4,000,000; in Austria-Hungary, 2,000,000; in Great Britain, 750,000; in Belgium 220,000; in Servia, 240,000—or, in all the stupendous sum of 17,912,000 pairs of hands abruptly withdrawn from gainful industry.

It is into this vast gap in the army of production that the women of Europe are marching. In Russia they are harvesting the great wheat crop so that the fighting men at the front may not starve, and the children who are to make up the next generation may not perish. In France they are taking upon themselves the huge task of the national agriculture, so that France, in its time of peril, may maintain its advantage of being the only country in Western Europe which produces sufficient food within its own borders to feed the nation.

In Germany women are providing the youthful sinews, with such aid as the old men and young boys can give, for the cultivation of the great truck and vegetable farms and for the harvesting of the crops upon which, since the seas are ruled by Great Britain and since Germany is isolated from every other Power in Europe save Austria-Hungary and Italy, the very existence of the Kaiser's enormous fighting machine must depend.

Austria-Hungary, beset on the south by fiery Servia and Montenegro, and on the west and north by the hordes of Russia, requires for her defense and for the reinforcement of Germany every available fighting man within her borders. Here again, the burden of food production has fallen upon the women. Great Britain, as yet involved only in a minor degree in the land operations, may not need to call upon its women to man its collieries and factories. But in the wilder countries of Servia and Montenegro the women are not only caring for the flocks and crops, but in many cases are seizing rifles and fighting in the pits side by side with the men.

For civilization in Europe has been at a stroke reduced to its lowest terms; it has reverted to the simplicity of savagery. Among barbarian peoples the man's business is war; the woman's the tending of crops and the preparation of food. To this primeval basis of the relations of the sexes Europe, after 20 centuries of enlightenment, has abruptly returned. For continental man today, as with the Indians, war; for woman today, as with the Indians, work in the fields.

It is fortunate, with this straining work of feeding the hugest armies ever assembled, that the peasant women of Germany, France, Russia, Austria-Hungary and Belgium are inured to labor in the fields. Generations of toil in the open have made them sturdy and untiring. But their tasks will now be doubled, and they will perforce do exhausting toil of which many of them have heretofore been relieved—such as plowing and threshing. Also, many women of tender nurture will be compelled for the first time to harden their soft hands at manual labor in the fields.

Thousands of women will seek the fame of Florence Nightingale as nurses of the sick and wounded soldiers. But even more important is the humble patriotism of the women who, with hearts breaking for their husbands, fathers and brothers, are with grim and dogged courage addressing themselves to the multitudinous task of feeding the armies of Europe; of preserving from the wreck of matter and the crash of worlds some vestige of productive industry, some fruits of construction and conservation snatched from the midst of universal destruction.

The peasant type of Northern France.

Germany's Birth Rate

It has been said that the terrible destruction of human life which is sure to be a result of the European war would bear more heavily on France than any other of the Powers engaged, because of her low birth rate, but according to statisticians and economists of Germany the birth rate of that country is also undergoing serious dimunition. There were forty-one births to the thousand in 1876 and only twenty-eight in 1912. The heaviest decline has occurred since the new century set in and Professor Wolff, a leading German economist, says that if the present tendency prevails the rate in his country will be the lowest in Europe by 1920, a prospect even those of anti-German sentiments must deplore.

TYPE OF PEASANT FIELD WORKER OF BELGIUM

German children do their share in harvesting the crops as soon as they are big enough to carry a basket.

Remarkable Criminal Trials Long Forgotten

Judge Lawson, from musty records, unearths many cases without parallels in modern times

Here is told the crime of the sailor who was indicted for manslaughter for throwing 16 passengers, two of them women, out of an overcrowded life boat after wreck of ship on the Atlantic

DRAGGED from the dust of a library shelf, where it has lain unnoticed for years, the story of a sea disaster in many respects similar to that to the liner Titanic, has just been made public. Its chief difference from the Titanic affair is that instead of a "women and children first" tragedy, it was a "sailors first," and 16 passengers, two of them women, were thrown into the sea so that sailors and a few surviving passengers might be saved.

It was not a ship of a foreign nation. On the contrary it flew the Stars and Stripes and its captain and crew were recruited in this country. One of them, the man at whose orders the passengers were thrown over, was found guilty of "unlawful" manslaughter by a United States court, was sentenced to prison for six months and fined $20. The fine was remitted.

The tragic story of this affair appears in the new work of John D. Lawson, called "American State Trials." This is a work unlike anything ever before attempted in the United States. For 14 years its author has been collecting material, with the assistance of hundreds of lawyers and librarians all over the country and with the library of Congress at his disposal. When it is finished—only two volumes have as yet appeared—it will be in 20 large volumes and will be a complete record of all the important criminal trials in the United States, from the Salem witchcraft cases down to the present.

The various accounts are wholly different in form from the usual dry records of court proceedings, as the work is designed for the layman as well as for the lawyer. Each account is preceded by a brief narrative of events and contains the indictments, testimony of witnesses, charges of the Judges and the orations of the attorneys.

It may be said in passing that it is pre-eminently a Missouri undertaking. The author has been for many years a professor and was for several years dean of the law department of Missouri University. More recently he has been delegated by the American Bar Association to study criminal jurisprudence abroad, with a view to suggesting reforms to our own code. William K. Bixby of St. Louis backed the labors of Judge Lawson when great expenditures became necessary. Anthony S. Robinson, president of the F. H. Thomas Law Book Co. of St. Louis, talked over the preliminary plans with Judge Lawson and undertook publication of the work.

In his preface Judge Lawson declares that the only complete account of this disaster extant is in a single pamphlet to be found in the library of Harvard University So completely has the affair been forgotten that it was not mentioned by the daily press at the time when the Titantic disaster set the newspaper world to digging in libraries for precedents.

On March 13, 1841, as Lawson's account unfolds the tale, the American ship William Brown left Liverpool for Philadelphia. It was a stout, well manned and well officered ship, with a crew of 17. It carried 65 passengers, practically all of them Scotch and Irish immigrants to America.

For several weeks the boat had a stormy passage. Heavy winds buffeted it about and its progress was infinitely slow until along towards the middle of April, when the winds died down and the seas became tranquil. At sunset, April 29, it was bowling along under full sail at 10 knots an hour.

The passengers, worn out from the long siege of bad weather, retired early to sleep, happy with the information that the vessel was about 250 miles off the Newfoundland coast, with every prospect of a speedy and pleasant ending to the voyage so unhappily begun.

At midnight there was a terrific, splitting crash, which threw standing men off their feet and jolted sleepers from their beds. At the same instant there arose the piercing cry of the lookout:

"Ice! Ice! Ice! We have hit a berg!"

The cry rang throughout the ship and startled the whole personnel. Men, women and children, scantily dressed and trembling with terror as much as the cold, scrambled to the deck. The captain, George L. Harris, ordered the pumps manned and asked the mate the extent of the damage.

"The whole bow is smashed in, sir!" a sailor shouted.

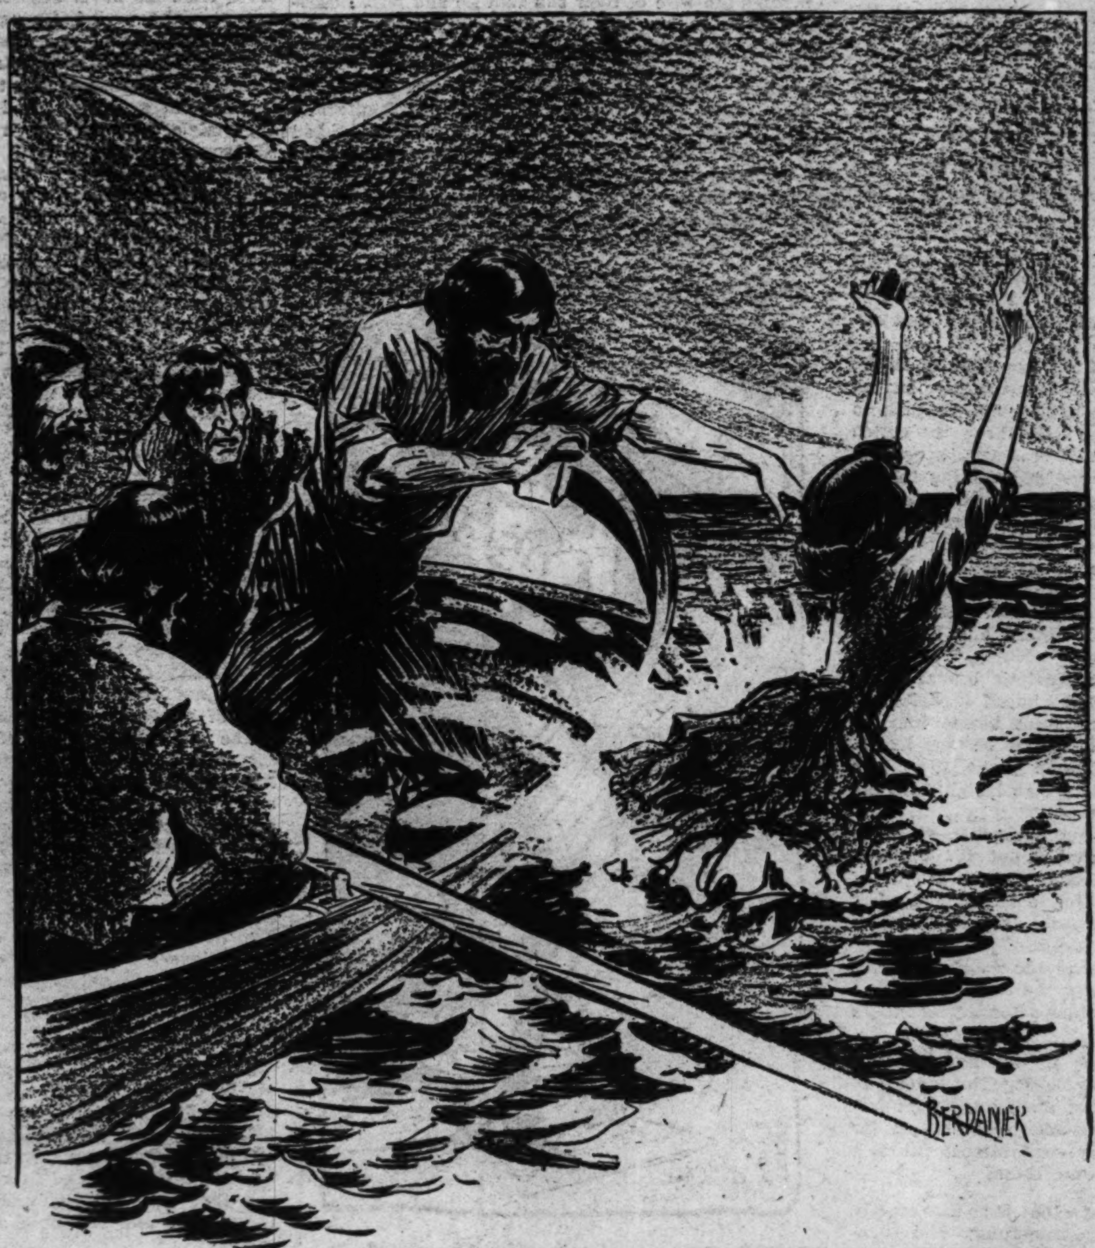
Harris ran to the forecastle, but was driven back by the inrush of water. Two large streams, each as big as a man's body, were pouring into the vessel. Harris ran to the deck and ordered the crew to man the boats.

Of these there were only two, a jolly boat, which would hold about ten persons, and a long boat, which, properly, should have carried about thirty-six. Instantly there was a scramble for the boats, the idea of passengers and crew alike being that he must have himself who could. In the end, however, nine of the crew, including the captain, and one passenger, a woman, were in the jolly boat and all the rest of the crew and 31 passengers were in the long boat.

Two of the women in the long boat afterwards said they were ordered out, but refused to go. The crew in surly silence allowed them to remain. The other 33 passengers, men and women, were left on the rapidly sinking vessel.

The jolly boat cut away and the long boat was about to cast off when a woman in it cried out that she was leaving her sick daughter behind.

A brawny seaman sprang up the slender cord still hitching the boat to the sinking ship. In a few minutes he reappeared with the sick girl in his arms. It was a perilous deed, the act of a hero. Yet it was done by Alexander W. Holmes, who later was to be blamed for the ghastly tragedy that followed. Holmes barely had time to get back into the long boat and cut loose from the ship, when the vessel sank, carrying the unfortunate 32 passengers to the bottom. All later accounts declared that until two minutes before the sinking the ill-fated persons were crying and beseeching assistance. Just before the William Brown sank, however, a stillness crept over the crowd. Perhaps the doomed victims, seeing their last hope go with the boats, had stopped to pray.



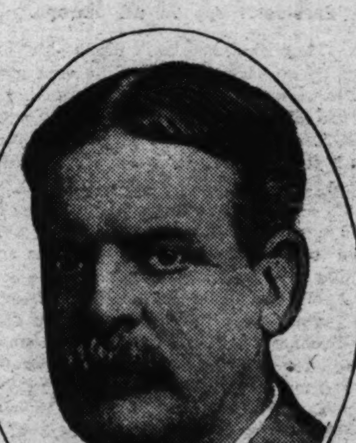
"Some of them would have to be thrown overboard."

The jolly boat and long boat kept company until morning. Fortunately there was no wind and the water was quiet. The two frail crafts threaded their way among fragments of ice, collisions with any one of which would have sent them to the bottom. Both were badly overloaded and the gunwales were close to the water's surface, so that a heavy sea would have swamped them.

In the morning the captain gave a chart and compass to the mate, in charge of the long boat, and advised him to seek the coast of Newfoundland. The two boats drifted apart, the jolly to be picked up a day or so later by a French vessel.

The boats had scarcely drifted apart before it began to rain. There was no wind, but a raw drizzle kept up all morning. It added not only to the misery of the survivors, but it threatened a very serious danger, that of capsizing. This danger was increased when a plug came out of the bottom of the long boat, threatening to swamp it instantly. This leak was repaired at a time when the water was almost up to the gunwales. In the midst of the suffering Holmes divested himself of all of his clothing, except shirt and trousers, and gave it to the suffering women.

The details of what happened then were brought out later in a trial at Philadelphia when Holmes was tried for "unlawful" manslaughter. From the testimony of the witnesses, however, a fairly coherent narrative of events can be gained.



Judge Lawson, for several years dean of Missouri University Law School, who has spent many years delving into court records of long ago, unearthing remarkable cases.

At 10 o'clock the following night, the plight of the survivors was pitiful. Water was coming in and the passengers were ordered to bail. Holmes and the mate were heard arguing about a course of action. The mate at first declared he would have nothing to do with something that had been suggested. Seeing that the others were at one mind with Holmes, he simply yielded command of the boat to the latter and sat passively by.

The passengers were not long learning what had been decided upon. Holmes curtly announced that the boat could not live until morning and carry all of them. Some of them would have to be thrown overboard. He and one or two others advanced and caught hold of Owen Riley, one of the passengers. Riley made no resistance. He was picked up and thrown into the ocean, where he sank like a stone, never to reappear.

Next the executioners laid hold of Frank Askin, who was accompanied by his two sisters, Mary and Ellen. Askin pleaded with them not to throw him overboard. He told them he would give them all the money he had, about $25, if they would postpone it until morning. They could then draw lots and he would go overboard willingly, if the fates were against him. He was told gruffly that the boat would not be afloat with all its load by morning. The next instant he had followed Riley into the water.

Protesting piteously against his fate, his two sisters told the seamen they did not wish to be spared if he were lost. The men grimly granted their request and the two women were next sent to join the two men.

"Holmes caught hold of James Black, a passenger," Bridget McGee, one of the survivors, afterwards testified. "He said, 'Who is this?' 'Why, it's James Black.' When the mate heard Black's name, he said: 'Don't part man and wife,' and they did not throw Black over. Charles Conlin was sitting next to me when, seeing Holmes coming to him, he said: 'Holmes, dear, you will not put me out?' Holmes answered: 'Yes, Charlie, you'll go, too,' and took hold of him and threw him out."

Conlin was the last person thrown out that night. Two other men hid under the seats. They were discovered in the morning and ordered to bail. When they had finished their task one of them was told he would have to get out of the boat. He pleaded that he had a wife and three children in America, but he was thrown overboard anyway. The other was pushed overboard as he was throwing out a bucket of water. Toward the middle of the following

THE TALKING WIRE

A romance of Anglo-German enmity and of that brilliant new figure among investigators of crime, the man who calls himself Hamilton Cleek.

Wire tapping is no unusual criminal method of obtaining secrets, but in this case it is the Government which, by the accident of a storm, hears its own secrets in transmission, presumably to some enemy. And at the time of their disclosure the documents containing these secrets are in actual use in a house which has no telegraph apparatus, which is under a strong guard and in which not even the guard could hear them, for no word is spoken. The intricacy of the problem is equaled only by the ingenuity of its unraveling, which, of course, is done by Cleek.

IT was a national case—the call of King and country. And if you want an Englishman to show what he's made of, just mention that circumstance to him.

Narkom had done so not two minutes before and the result was that Lennard—not having any other means of showing his enthusiasm and his readiness to answer the call—threw the clutch wide open and took the Portsmouth road at a pace which ate up the distance like a starved dog wolfing food.

At Gomshall he made his first and only stop—to pick up Cleek, who had arranged to be met there—but his interest was so great he seemed to begrudge even the half-minute it took to get his man aboard; and, before you could wink an eye, the car went whizzing on again at a demon's pace, through the mud and water which the furious storm of the night before had left as a memento of its unwelcome visit.

"Gad, but he's full of it, the patriotic beggar," said Cleek, with a laugh, as he found himeslf deposited in Narkom's lap instead of on the seat beside him, so sudden was the car's start the instant he was inside. "It might give our German friends pause, don't you think, Mr. Narkom, if they could get an insight into the spirit of the race as a fighting unit?"

"It'll give 'em hell if they run up against it—make no blooming error about that!" rapped out the Superintendent, too "hot under the collar" to be choice of words. "It's a nasty little handful to fall foul of when it's temper is up; and this damned spy business, done behind a mask of friendship in times of peace. * * * Look here, Cleek! If it comes to the point, just give me a gun with the rest. I'll show the Government that I can lick something besides stamps for my country's good—by James, yes!"

The outburst, unusual though it was from such a quarter, did not wholly surprise Cleek. The temper of the people had been sorely tried during the past few days, and last night's mysterious affair—the reason for this hasty call to action today—was almost the last straw. The faots of the case were these:

ON the preceding Thursday—that is to say exactly eight days previously—something had happened at Gosport which shocked the authorities to the very marrow and threw the whole country into a state of furious indignation and angry alarm. In the waterway between Barrow Island and the extreme end of the Royal Clarence Victualing Yard, there had been found floating the body of a man of about five-and thirty years of age, fully and fashionably clothed, and having all those outward signs which betoken a person of some standing. It was evident at once that death must have been the result of accident and that the victim had been unable to swim, for the hands were encased in kid gloves, the coat was tightly buttoned and a pair of field glasses in a leather case still hung from the long shoulder strap which supported the weight of them. The victim's inability to swim was established by the fact that he had made no effort to rid himself of these hampering conditions and was clinging tightly to a foot-long bit of driftwood which he must have clutched at as it floated by. It was surmised, therefore, that the man must have fallen overboard in the dark—either from the foreshore or from some vessel or small boat in which he was journeying at the time—and had been carried away by the swift current and drowned without being missed, the condition of the body clearly establishing the fact that it had been in the water for something more than a fortnight. Later, it was identified by one of the deck hands of the pleasure steamer which cruises around the Isle of Wight daily, as being that of a man he had seen aboard that vessel on one of its night trips to Alum Bay between two and three weeks previously, and still later it was discovered that a boatman in that locality had been hired to take a gentleman from the Needles to a yacht "lying out at sea" that self-same night and that the gentleman in question never turned up.

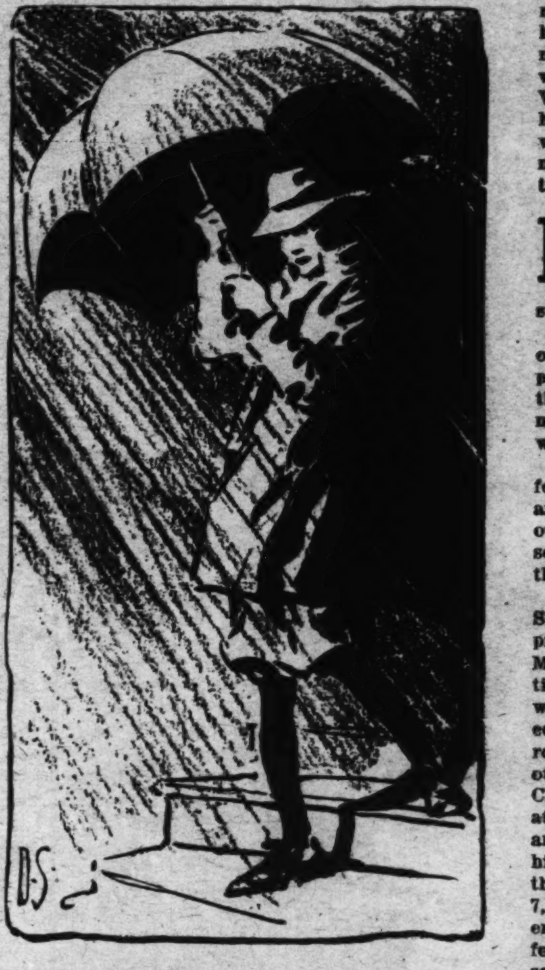
What followed gave these two circumstances an appalling significance. For, when the body was carried to the mortuary and its clothing searched for possible clews to identification, there was found upon it a sealed packet addressed simply "A. Steinmuller, Koenigstrasse," and inside the packet there were two unmounted photographs of the exterior of the Blockhouse Fort and the Southsea Fort, a more or less accurate ground plan drawing of the interior of the Portsmouth Dockyard, together with certain secret information relative to supplies and to the proposed armament of cruisers now undergoing alteration and re-equipment.

The wrath and amazement engendered by that appalling discovery, however, were nothing compared with the one which so swiftly followed.

Brought up before the Admiral Superintendent and the board, John Beechman, the dock master—who alone knew these things outside of the Admiralty—was obliged to admit that one person, and only one, his eldest son, was in a position to obtain admission to the safe in which he kept his private papers, and that son was engaged to a young lady whom he had met during a holiday tour on the Continent.

English or foreign? he was asked; to which he replied, English—or at least English by birth, although her late father was a German. He had become naturalized before his death, and was wholly in sympathy with the country of his adoption. He did not die in it, however. Circumstances caused him to visit the United States and he was killed in a railway disaster. It was because the daughter was thus left orphaned and was so soon to become the wife of their son that he and Mrs. Beechman had taken her into their home in advance of the marriage.

THE lady's name was Hillmann—Miss Greta Hillmann. She was of extremely good family and quite well to do in her own right. No, she had never been back to Germany since the date of the engagement. She had relatives there, however—one in particular—a Baron von Ziegelmundt and his son Axel. The son had visited England twice—once many months back and the last time some seven or eight weeks ago. They liked him very much—the bridegroom-elect especially so. They had become very great friends indeed. No—Axel von Ziegelmundt was no longer in England. He left something like a month ago. He was on a pleasure trip around the world, Beechman heard, but had no idea where he went when he left Portsmouth.



"That 'boy' was Sophie Borovonski, probably the most beautiful, unscrupulous, reckless and dare-devil spy in all Europe."

Two hours after this statement was made, if the populace could have got hold of young Harry Beechman it would have torn him to pieces; for it was then discovered that the drowned man was no less a person than this Herr Axel von Ziegelmundt, and that they not only spent the greater part of that particular day shut up in young Beechman's room in the Portsmouth Hotel, but had been together up to the very moment when the excursion steamer started on its moonlight trip to Alum Bay and to the bringing about of that providential accident which prevented the state affairs of an unsuspecting nation from being betrayed to a secret foe.

What followed was, in the face of this, of course, but natural. John Beechman's resignation was at once demanded and his son's arrest ordered. It served no purpose that he denied indignantly the charge of being a traitor and swore by every sacred thing that the hours spent in his room at the hotel were passed in endeavoring to master the intricacies of the difficult German card game, skaat, and that never in all their acquaintance had one word touching upon the country or the country's affairs passed between Axel von Ziegelmundt and himself, so help him God! It was in vain, also, that Greta Hillmann—shouting hysterically her belief in him and begging wildly that if he must be put in prison she might be taken with him, "and murdered when you murder him, if he is to be courtmartialed and shot, you wretched blunderers!"—it was in vain that Greta Hillmann clung to him and fought with all her woman's strength to keep the guard from laying hands upon him or to tear her from his side—the outraged country demanded him and took him in spite of all. Nor did it turn the current of sympathy in his direction that, crazed when they tore him from her, this frantic creature had gone from swoon to swoon until her senses left her entirely and the end was—tragedy.

The full details were never forthcoming. The bare facts were that she was carried back to Beechman's house in a state of hysteria bordering close upon insanity, and that when, under orders from the Admiralty, that house and all its contents were impounded pending the fullest inquiry into the dock master's books and accounts, the Admiral Superintendent and the appointed auditor entered in possession, her condition was found to be so serious that it was decided not to insist upon her removal for a day or two at least. A nurse was procured from the naval hospital and put in charge of her; but at some period during the fourth night of that nurse's attendance—and when she, worn out by constant watching, slept in her chair—the half-delirious patient arose, and, leaving a note to say that life had lost all its brightness for her, and if they cared to find her they might look for her in the sea, vanished entirely. She could scarcely have hit upon a worse thing for the evil repute of her lover's name or her own. For those who had never known her personally were quick to assert that this was proof enough of how the thing had been managed. In short, that she, too, was a spy, and that she had adopted this subterfuge to get back to Germany before the scent grew hot and the law could lay a hand upon her. Those who had known her took a more merciful view so far as she was concerned, but one which made things look all the blacker for her lover. What could her desperation and her utter giving up all hope even before the man was put on trial mean if it was not that she knew he was guilty, knew he would never get off with his life, and that her suicide was a tacit admirsion of this?

MEANWHILE public indignation ran high, the investigation of the dock master's books, papers and accounts proceeded in camera, and all England waited breathlessly for the result to be made known.

Thus matters stood when, on Thursday night, at 7:30 o'clock—exactly one week after the discovery of that packet on the body of the drowned man—an amazing thing happened, a thing which smacked almost of magic, and put to shame all that had gone before in the way of mystery, surprise and terror.

The wildest storm that had been known on that coast for years had been raging steadily ever since daybreak and was raging still. A howling wind, coming straight over the channel from France, was piling ink-black seas against an ink-black shore, and all the devils of the pit seemed to be loose in the noisy darkness.

In the suspended dock master's house the Admiral Superintendent, Sir Charles Fordeck, together with his private secretary, Mr. Paul Grimsdick, and the auditor, Mr. Alexander MacInery, continuing their investigations since morning, were coming within sight of the work's end—the only occupants of a locked and guarded room, outside of which a sentry was posted, while round about the house in the stormy outer darkness other guards patrolled ceaselessly. Over the books Sir Charles and the auditor bent at one end of the room, at the other Paul Grimsdick tapped on his typewriter and made transcripts from the shorthand notes beside him. It was at this instant, just when the clock on the mantel was beginning to chime the half-hour after 7, that such a crash of thunder ripped out of the heavens that the very earth seemed to tremble with the force of it, and the three men fairly jumped in their seats.

"Gad! that was a stunner, if you like!" exclaimed Sir Charles with a laugh. "Something went down that time, or I miss my guess."

Something had "gone down"—gone down in black and white, too, at that—and before another half-hour had passed the mystery and the appalling nature of that something was made known to him and to his two companions.

The operator at the central telegraph office, sitting beside a silent instrument with the key open, deciphering a message which a moment before had come through, jumped as they had jumped when that crash of thunder sounded; then without hint or warning up spoke the open instrument, beginning a sentence in the middle and chopping it off before it was half done.

"Hullo! that deflected something—crossed communication or I'm a Dutchman!" he said, and bent over to "take it." In another moment he got more of a shock than 20 thunderbolts could possibly have given him. For, translated, that interrupted communication ran thus:

". . . and eight-inch guns. The floating conning tower's lateral plates of . . ."

And there, as abruptly as it began, the communication left off.

"Good God! There's another damned German spy at it," exclaimed the operator, jumping from his seat and grabbing for his hat. "Hawkins, take this instrument and watch for more. Somebody's telegraphin' naval secrets from the dockyard, and the storm's 'tapped' a wire somewhere and sent the message to us!" Then he flung himself out into the storm and darkness and ran and ran and ran.

But the mystery of the thing was all the greater when the facts came to be examined. For these two parts of sentences were found to be verbatim copies of the shorthand notes which Mr. Paul Grimsdick had just taken down. These notes had never left the sight of the three men in the guarded room of that guarded house for so much as one second since they were made. No one but they passed either in or out of that room during the whole seven days of that inquiry. There was no telegraph instrument in the room—in the house—or within any possible reach from it. Yet somebody in that building—somebody who could only know the things by

"'WE three alone were in this house when that abominable thing happened; we three alone had access to the records from which that information was wired. It never for so much as a fraction of one second passed out of our keeping or our sight. It must have been wired from this house and that room; one or the other must have done it. I did not! MacInery did not! Grimsdick did not!' " standing in that room and copying them, for never once had they been spoken of by word of mouth—some invisible, impalpable, superhuman body was wiring State secrets from it. How? And to whom?

Naturally, this state of affairs set the whole country by the ears and evoked a panicky condition which was not lessened by the press' frothing and screaming.

THUS matters stood on the evening of Wednesday, the twenty-second of May, and thus they still stood on the morning of the twenty-third, when the telephone rang and Dollops rushed into Cleek's bedroom crying excitedly and disjointedly:

"Mr. Narkom, sir. Ringing up from his own house. Wants you in a hurry. National case, he says, and not a minute to lose."

Cleek was out of bed and at the instrument in a winking; but he had no more than spoken the customary "Hello!" into the receiver, when the Superintendent's voice cut in cyclonically and swept everything before it in a small tornado of excited words.

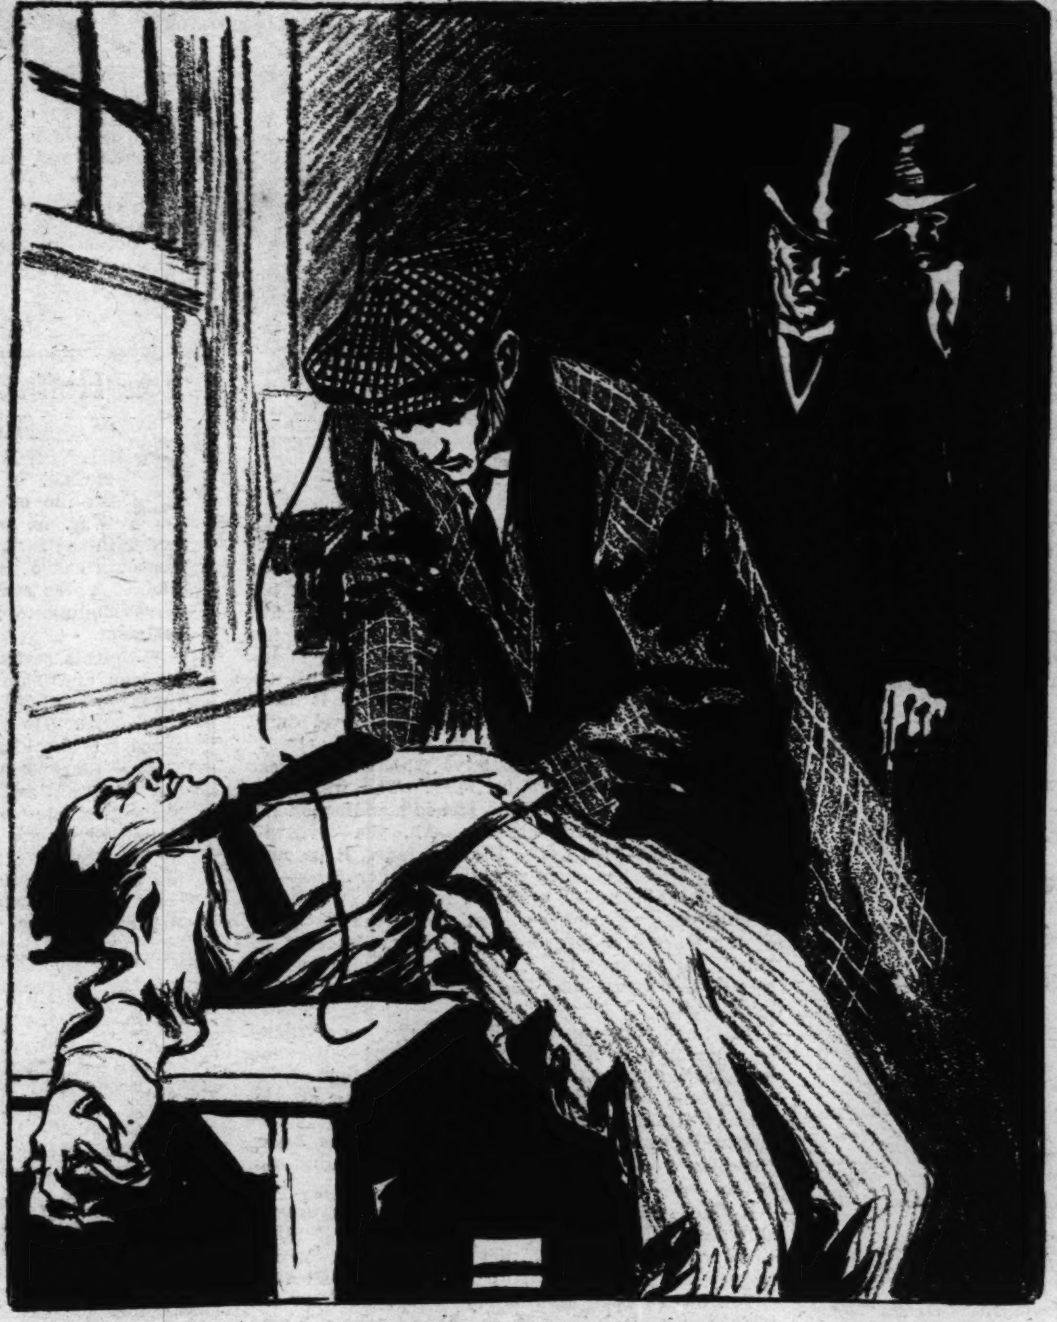
"Call of the country, dear chap!" he cried. "That infernal dockyard business at Portsmouth. Sir Charles Fordeck just sent through a call for you. Rush like hell! Don't stop for anything! Train it over to Guildford if you have to charter a special. Meet you there—in the Portsmouth road—with the limousine—at 7:30. We'll show 'em! Goodby!"

Then "click" went the instrument as the communication was cut off, and away went Cleek, like a gunshot, on a wild rush for his clothes. By 7 he was in the Portsmouth road at Guildford, munching the sandwiches Dollops had thoughtfully put in his pocket and keeping a sharp lookout for the coming of the red limousine.

It pulled up with a jerk when it came abreast of him, but so great was Lennard's excitement, so deep seated his patriotic interest in the business he had in hand, he seemed to begrudge even the half-minute it took to get his man aboard; and before you could have turned around twice the car was rocketing on again at a demon's pace.

"Gad! but he's full of it, the patriotic beggar!" said Cleek with a laugh, as he found himself deposited in Narkom's lap instead of one the seat beside him, so sudden was the car's start the instant he was inside. "It might give our German friends pause, you think, Mr. Narkom, if they could get an insight into the spirit of the race as a fighting unit?"

"It'll give 'em hell if they run up against it—make no blooming error about that!" rapped out the Superintendent, too "hot in the choler," to be choice of words.



"'Gentlemen, the wire tapper, Boris Borovonski.' said Cleek as he bent over the dead man."

"Just so," said Cleek, with one of his curious, crooked smiles. "But let us hope it will not come to that And I see by papers that the long-threatened Mauravanian revolution has broken out at last. In short, that our good friend Count Irma has made his escape from Sulberga, put himself at the head of the insurgents, and is organizing a march on the capital"——

Here he pulled himself up abruptly, as if remembering something, and, before Mr. Narkom could put in a word, launched into the subject of the case in hand and set him thinking and talking of other things.

IT had gone 9 by all the reliable clocks in town when the wild race to the coast came to an end, and after darting swallow-like through the wind-swept streets of Portsmouth, the limousine, mud-splashed and disreputable, rushed up to the guarded entrance of the suspended dock master's house at Portsea; and precisely one and a quarter minutes thereafter Cleek stood in the presence of the three men most deeply concerned in the clearing up of this mystifying affair.

He found Sir Carles Fordeck, a dignified and courtly gentleman of polished manners and measured speech, although now, quite naturally, laboring under a distress of mind which visibly disturbed him. He found Mr. Paul Grimsdick, his secretary, a frank-faced, straight-looking young Englishman of 30; Mr. Alexander MacInery, a stolid, unemotional Scotsman of middle age, with a huge knotted forehead, eyebrows like young moustaches and a face like a face of granite; and he found, too, reason to believe that each of these was, in his separate way, a man to inspire confidence and respect.

Sir Charles, laying a hand upon the shoulder of the auditor and the secretary, and placing himself between them, said: "We three alone were in this house when that abominable thing happened; we three alone had access to the records from which that information was wired. It never, for so much as the fraction of one second, passed out of our keeping or our sight. It must have been wired from this house, from that room, and in that case, one or other of us must positively have been the person to do so. Well, I did not; Maclinery did not; Grimsdick did not. And yet, as you know, the 'wiring' was done—we should never stand a chance of knowing to whom, nor by whom, but for the accident which deflected the course of the message."

"H'm! Yes! I don't think," commented Cleek reflectively. "It won't wash, that theory; no, decidedly it won't wash. Pardon? Oh, no, Sir Charles, I am not casting any doubt upon the telegraph operator's statement of the manner in which he received the message; it is his judgment that is at fault, not his veracity. Of course, there have been cases—very rare ones, happily—of one wire automatically tapping another through, as he suggested, there being a break and an overlapping of the broken wire on to the sound one; but in the present instance there isn't a ghost of a chance of such a thing having happened. In other words, Sir Charles, it is as unsound in theory as it is false in fact. Mr. Narkom has been telling me on the way here that the operator accounted for the sudden starting of the message to the falling of a storm-snapped wire upon an uninjured one, and for its abrupt cessation to the slipping off of that broken wire under the influence of the strong gale. Now, as we entered the town and proceeded through it, I particularly noted the fact that no broken wires were anywhere visible, nor was there sight or sign of men being engaged in repairing one."

"Ah, yes," agreed Sir Charles, a trifle dubiously, "that may be quite so, Mr. Cleek; but, if you will pardon my suggesting it, is there not the possibility of a flaw in your reasoning upon that point? The wire in question may not have been located in that particular district through which you were traveling.

"I don't think there is any chance of my having made an error of that sort, Sir Charles," replied Cleek, smiling. "Had I been likely to do so, our friend the telegraph operator would have prevented it. He recognized at once that the communication was coming over the wire from the dockyard, I am told; and I have observed that everyone of the dockyard wires is intact. I fancy when we come down to the bottom of it we shall discover that it was not the dockyard wire which 'tapped' a message from some other, but that the dockyard wire was being 'tapped' itself, and that the storm, causing a momentary interruption in the carrying on of that 'tapping' process, allowed a portion of the message to slip past and continue to the wire's end—the telegraph office."

"Good lud! Then in that case"——

"In that case, Mr. Narkom, there can be no shadow of a doubt that that message was sent by somebody in this house—and over the dockyard's own private wire."

"But how, Mr. Cleek—in the name of all that is wonderful, how?"

"Ah, that is the point, Sir Charles. I think we need not go into the matter of who is at the bottom of the whole affair, but confine ourselves to the business of discovering how the thing was done, and how much information has already gone out to the enemy. I fancy we may set our minds at rest upon one point, however, namely, the identity of the person whose hand supplied the drawing found upon the body of the drowned man. That hand was a woman's; that woman, I feel safe in saying, was Sophie Borovonski, professionally known to the people of the underworld as 'La Tarantula.' "

"I never heard of her, Mr. Cleek. Who is she?"

"Probably the most beautiful, unscrupulous, reckless, dare-devil spy in all Europe, Sir Charles. She is a Russian by birth, but owes allegiance to no country and to no crown. Together with her depraved brother, Boris, and her equally desperate paramour, Nicolo Ferrand, she forms one of the trio of paid bravos who for years have been at the beck and call of any nation despicable enough to employ them; always ready for any piece of treachery or dirty work, so long as their price is paid—as cunning as serpents, as slippery as eels, as clever as the devil himself, and as patient. We shall not go far astray, gentlemen, if we assert that the lady's latest disguise was that of Miss Greta Hilmann."

"Good God! Young Beechman's fiancee?"

"Exactly, Sir Charles. I should be able to identify her from a photograph were one obtainable, which I doubt—she is far too clever for that sort of thing—but the evidence is conclusive enough to satisfy me, at least, of the lady's identity."

"But how—how?"

"Mr. Narkom will tell you, Sir Charles, that from our time of starting this morning to our arrival here we made but one stop. That stop was at the Portsmouth mortuary before we appeared at this house. I wished to see the body of the man who was drowned. I have no hesitation, Sir Charles, in declaring that that man's body is not, and never was, Axel von Ziegelmundt. The body is that of Nicolo Ferrand, La Tarantula's clever lover. The inference is obvious. Miss Greta Hillmann's anguish and despair were real enough, believe me (that is why it deceived everybody so completely). It was not, however, over the frightful position of young Beechman that she sorrowed, but over the death of Ferrand. Had he lived, I believe she has daring enough to have remained here and played her part to the end, but she either lost her nerve and her mental balance—which, by the way, is not in the least like her under any circumstances whatsoever—or some other disaster of which we know nothing overtook her and interfered with her carrying on the work in conjunction with her brother.

"Her brother?"

"Yes. He would be sure to be about. They all three worked in concert. Gad; if I'd only been here before the vixen slipped the leash—if I only had! Let us have the elder Mr. Beechman in, if you please, Sir Charles; there's a word or so I want to have with him. You've had him summoned, of course!"

"Yes, he and the telegraph operator as well; I thought you might wish to question both," replied he. "Grimsdick, go—or, no! I'll go myself. Beechman ought to know of this appalling thing; and it is best that it should be broken by a friend."

HE left the room, coming back a few minutes later in company with the telegraph operator and the now almost hysterical dock master. He waited not one second for introduction or permission or anything else, that excited father, but rushed at Cleek and caught him by the hand.

"It's my boy and you're clearing him! God bless you!" he exclaimed, catching Cleek's hand and wringing it with all his strength. "It isn't in him to sell his country; I'd have killed him with my own hands years ago, if I thought it was. But it wasn't—it never was! My boy, my boy! my splendid, loyal boy!"

"That's right, old chap, have it out. Here on my shoulder, if you want to, daddy, and don't be ashamed of it!" said Cleek, and reached round his arm over the man's shoulder and clapped him on the back "Let her go. We'll have him cleared, daddy—gad, yes! And look here. When he is cleared, you take him by the ear and tell him to do his sweethearting in England."

"Thank you, sir, thank you! I can see it now, Mr. Cleek. Not much use in shouting 'Rule Britannia' if you're going to ship on a foreign craft. But anybody would have been taken in with her. And when she lost her father the wife and I simply couldn't help taking her to our hearts."

"Quite so. Ever see that 'father,' Mr. Beechman?"

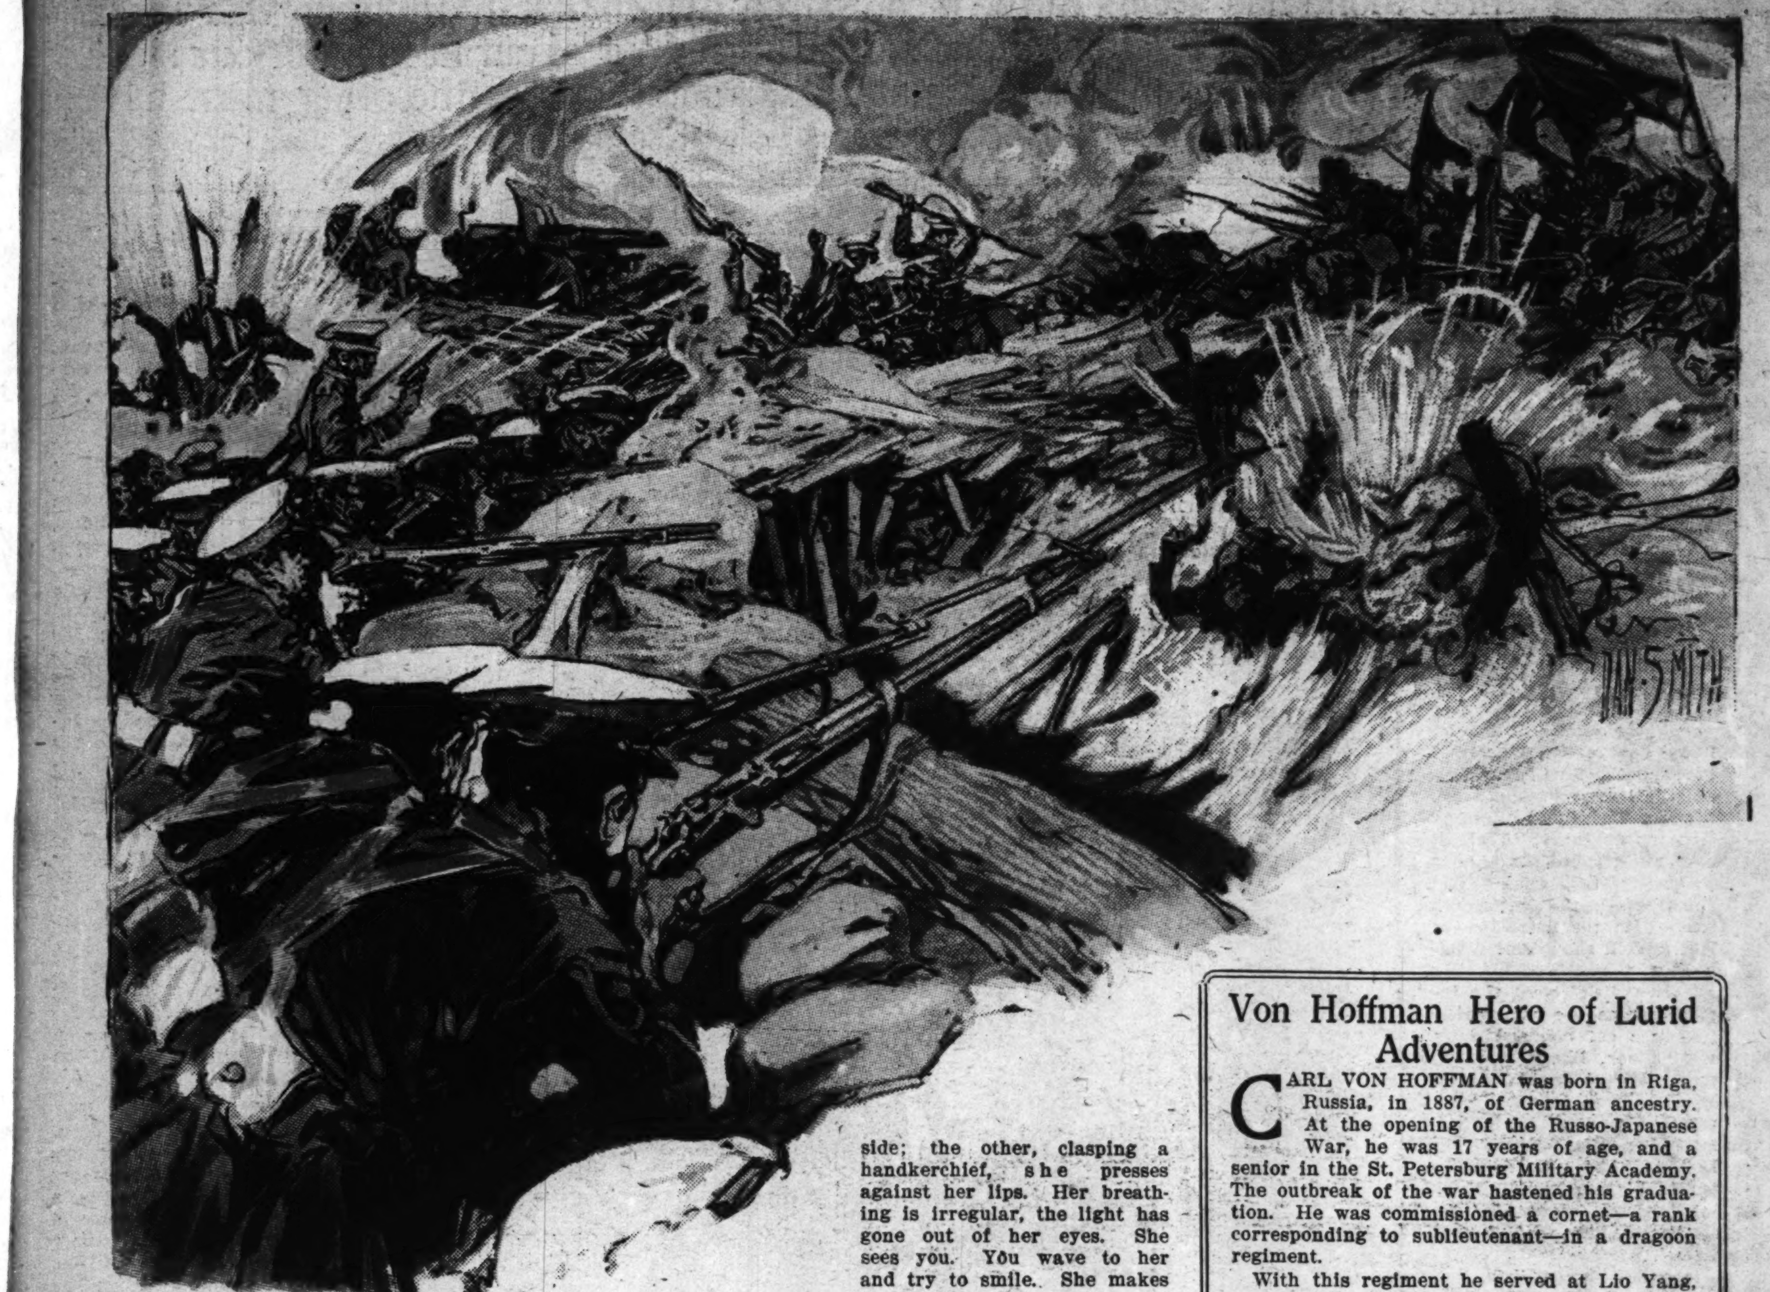
THE RED MAELSTROM



Russo-Japanese war veteran, decorated for gallantry in action, tells how one's terror and horror are succeeded by a crimson fury, which transforms men once kindly and peaceable into crazy, murderous beasts . . .

PROBABLY every man, in reading the accounts of the mighty warfare in process abroad, has asked himself what emotions he would experience if he were one of the soldiers facing and inflicting death upon a modern battlefield.

Tolstoi, with the unforgettable vividness of genius, has replied to the question in "Sevastopol Sketches" and "War and Peace." But he described an obsolete warfare, that of the Napoleonic and Crimean Wars. Frederick Palmer has attempted an answer in his novel, "The Last Shot," but his point of view, as a war correspondent, has been that of a spectator rather than a combatant. Stephen Crane, in "The Red Badge of Courage," has perhaps surpassed all imaginative writers in depicting the desperate psychology of the battlefield.

But now comes Carl Von Hoffman, an actual veteran of the Russo-Japanese War, with an impressionistic sketch, so graphic as to bring home its horrors to every heart, analyzing the feelings of a soldier in the midst of the super-deadly engines of destruction employed in today's warfare. His article may be called a miniature of "The Red Badge of Courage." Von Hoffman is an ex-Cornet of Horse in the Russian Army, and was decorated with the Cross of St. George, third class, for gallantry in action.

By Carl Von Hoffman.

WAR! War is declared! Bugles, drums crash in the streets. People with tense faces silently form with their lips the portentous word "mobilization!" Once quiet streets throb with the tramp of marching feet; hurrying squads of cavalry clank and rattle; artillery bumps dully over the pavements.

An interval has passed. You have been enrolled, equipped and are entraining for the front. Soldiers plod heavily into the cars and thrust their heads out of the windows. On the station outside are old men, women young and old, and children—children in arms, children clinging tightly to their mother's dresses, children staring curiously at the trains. Mothers and wives, daughters and sweethearts, strain their eyes to catch glimpses of faces at the car windows.

Over there on the platform you see a girl. She is frail-looking and young. She holds one hand to her side; the other, clasping a handkerchief, she presses against her lips. Her breathing is irregular, the light has gone out of her eyes. She sees you. You wave to her and try to smile. She makes a spasmodic motion with the clenched handkerchief, and then presses it more tightly to her mouth. She shakes her head dully. What longing, what anguish in her eyes!

A shriek from the locomotive whistle. A groan from the people on the platform. The wheels revolve, the train moves. The girl is standing on her toes, staring—staring, at you. Ah, you cry, who has forced me from her? The face fades, it becomes mingled with the staring white of other faces—the whole scene dims—it blurs—it is gone.

With the scream of the whistle, with the first grind of the wheels, a settled opaque gloom descends on you. An unreasoning shrinking nervousness permeates the brain—the Red Maelstrom is engulfing your mind.

The hand becomes unsteady, the eyes rove vacantly. Your talk is random. Your humor hectic. You feel that every revolution of the wheels brings nearer the enemy. Where is he? When will he attack? Where? How? Shall I be killed? Mangled? These and a thousand other questions storm the brain. Hope takes wing, and horror lies upon the mind like an incubus.

If the train rushes into a tunnel you shake as if with ague. If the enemy should attack here? How could we see them? If they were to blow up the train? All nerve-racked, all feverish, all—all idle.

You are at your destination. You rush from the train and grasp a soldier on the platform. Where are the enemy? When shall we attack them? The soldier shrugs his shoulders. How should he know? You are at headquarters. The front is a hundred miles away—by foot. How long has he been there? Two months. And he has not been in battle? No. You draw longer breaths. You are becoming yourself again. The soldier continues: A trainload of wounded had come in today. They were in a bloody engagement. You know Jack So-and-so? Yes. He was badly hurt. The man beside him was knocked over dead as a door nail. What did Jack do? He says he cannot remember. Was he frightened? No.

Days go by, and there is no movement of troops. Gradually you regain your mental equilibrium. Gradually you become hardened—gradually you become impatient to get into action.

Suddenly one morning the reveille arouses you out of your slumber to an unaccustomed bustle. Marching orders have arrived. "Brigades mentioned, forming such and such a division of a certain army corps, are to proceed to the front immediately. NO MUSIC."

At last you are to be in the fight. At last you are to see bayonets shine and grow red—to hear artillery crash and rifles crackle—to see the earth gashed by the flying wheels of gun carriages—to kill—whom?

Men whom you have never seen and cannot hate. Men who have done you no harm. Loving fathers of families, dutiful sons, tender husbands and lovers. You are, perhaps, to deprive their loved ones of them. You? Your thoughts swing back to the girl on the station. Perhaps they will deprive her of you.

You fall in, the bugles ring and you march.

Somewhere before you is the enemy. Again unutterable horror depresses the mind and burdens the body. Fear holds you like a vise. Fifty thousand men going into battle and not three conversing! The shoulders sag, the head hangs. The forehead is wrinkled, the eyes are staring and glassy. Only the lower rim of the pupil is visible. The eyeballs seem like walls of white. The corners of the eyes are drawn and creased. The teeth show, the mouth smiles. Does it? A closer look will show you that it is a snarl which distorts it. And out of every feature looks ghastly foreboding.

Trudge, trudge, trudge. No talk, no laugh—no sound but the throbbing of the drums at the head of the regiments. And every throb is echoed in the heart. The Red Maelstrom is getting its death-grip.

Suddenly the sky is torn, a clattering explosion fills the air. A shrapnel shell has exploded in the midst of the company. A score of men lie shattered on the ground. Heads are thrown this way, bodies that, blood trickles in rills from the ensanguined heap on the ground, and drips from the uniforms of adjacent survivors.

With the bursting of the shell, fear, horror, and all thoughts of self pass away. The Red Maelstrom has seized you, never fully to lose its hold.

You are on the firing line. You fire, you load, you fire, with a fury indescribable. You do not see the enemy, and that adds to your rage. A shell bursts near you and dashes the man next you out of all semblance of humanity. You heed it no more than the bursting of a penny squib.

Behind you the artillery crashes and roars. The air splits with the force of its detonation. Finally, even that fades from the ear. But the brain throbs in unison with its roaring.

Suddenly the foemen leap from their concealment and charge. They come in open order, running like jack rabbits. Bayonets gleam in the sun. Over them glare living, staring faces.

Running ahead of his command is an officer. He is an excellent target, yet no one fires at him. Why? Ah, wait and see.

The officer is rapidly nearing your intrenchment. Suddenly a half score of men leap up and hurl themselves at him. Bayonets whirl upward in the sun and the next instant are buried in his body.

And then—rage ungovernable. What happens you are unable to say. There is a hiatus in your life that you can never fill. Perhaps you are better for not knowing what you did. That is the Red Maelstrom. That is the hysteria which forces you to do battle.

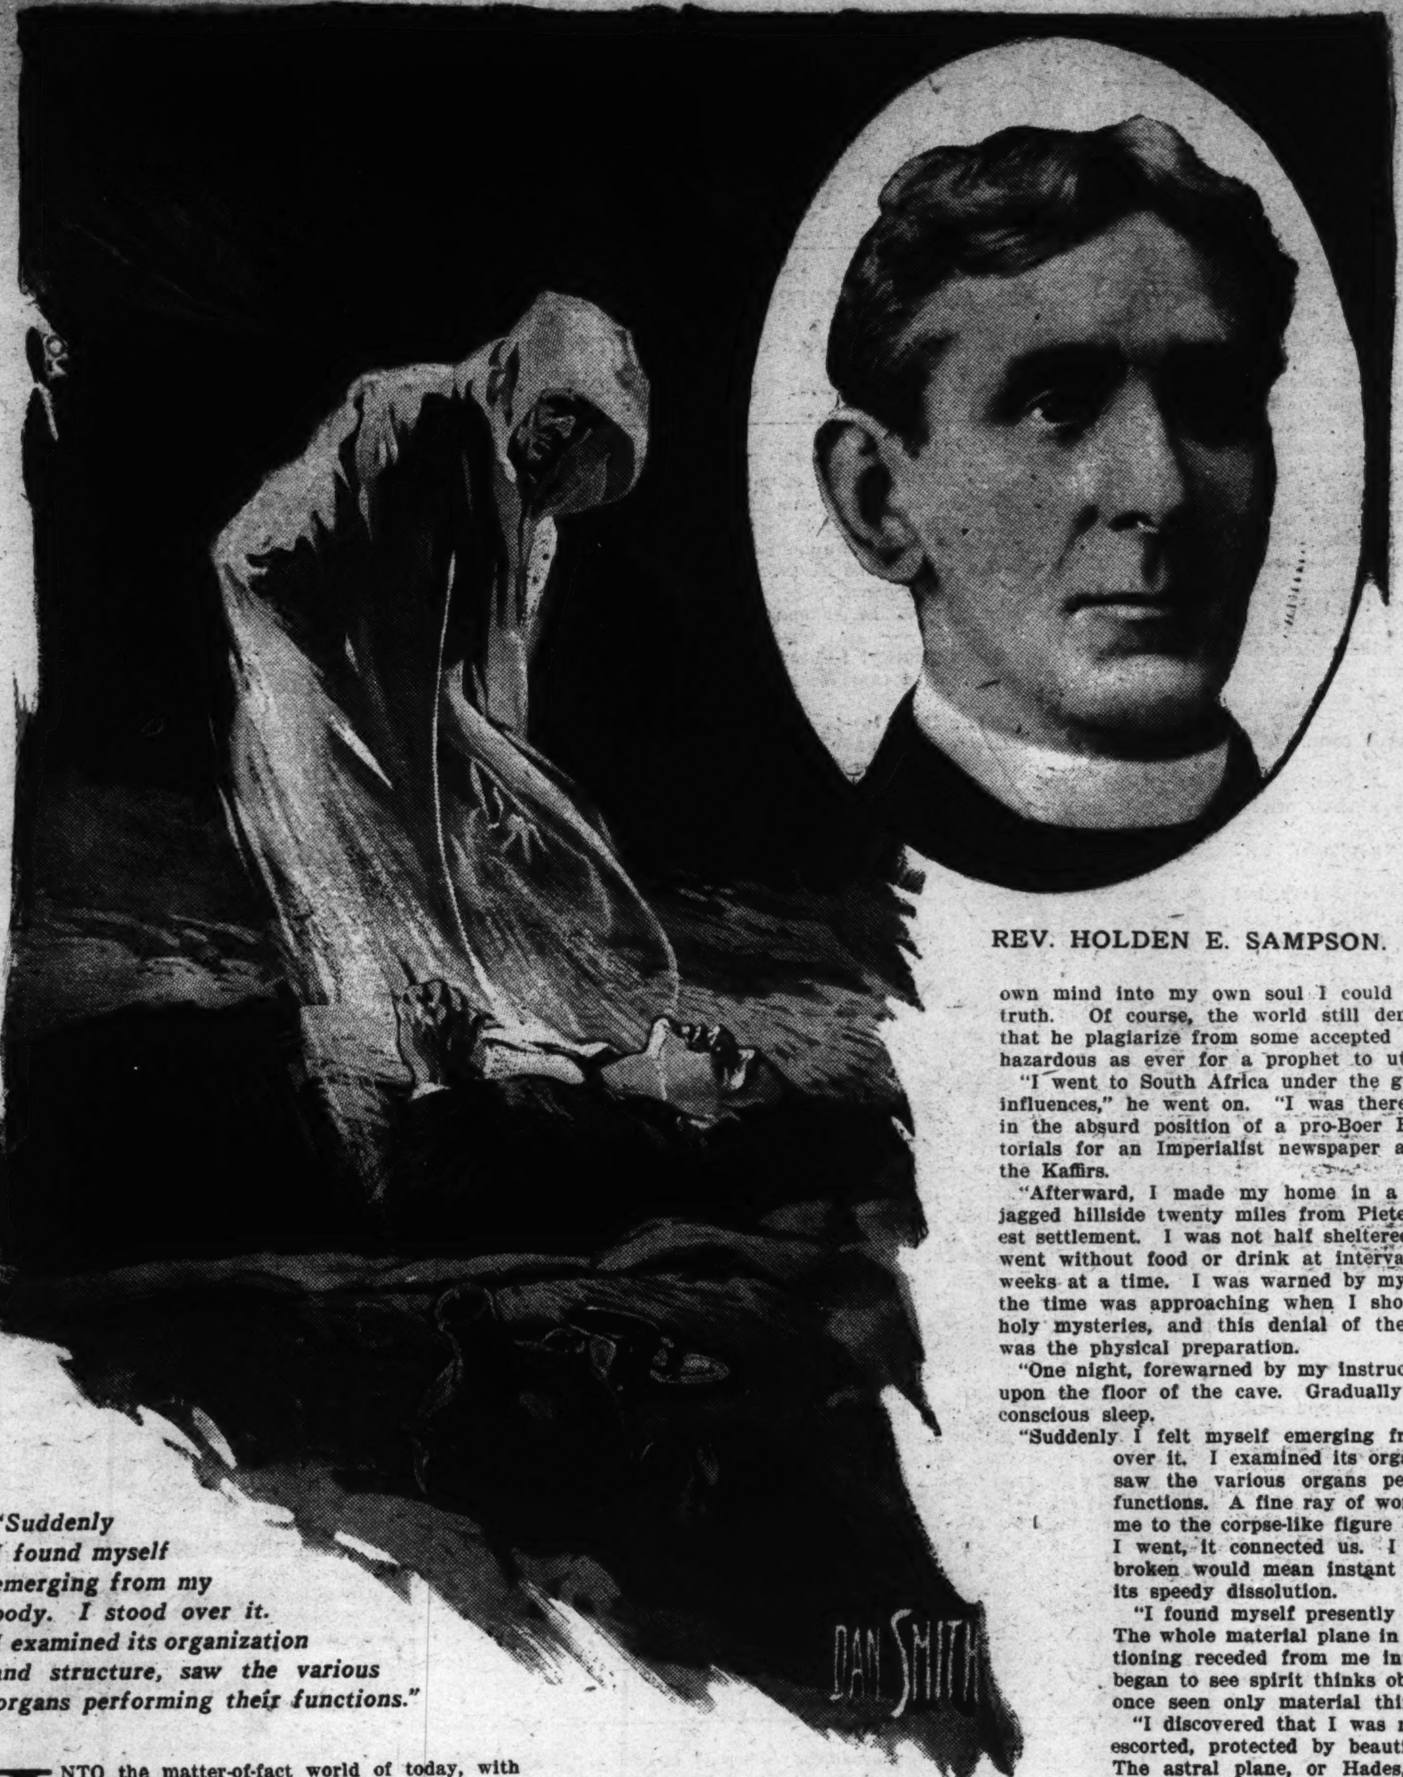
Bravery, patriotism, fanaticism—all would be powerless without the mania that turns man into an unreasoning, murderous beast.

Von Hoffman Hero of Lurid Adventures

CARL VON HOFFMAN was born in Riga, Russia, in 1887, of German ancestry. At the opening of the Russo-Japanese War, he was 17 years of age, and a senior in the St. Petersburg Military Academy. The outbreak of the war hastened his graduation. He was commissioned a cornet—a rank corresponding to sublieutenant—in a dragoon regiment.

With this regiment he served at Lio Yang, Mukden and Yalu. He was wounded several times by bullets and shrapnel, and has one saber scar. He was one of 12 men who escaped the annihilation of his regiment at Lio Yang. Since leaving the Russian army he has been an aviator and globe circler, and has taken pictures of all the forts in the United States for this Government. He went to Brazil with Col. Roosevelt, and took moving pictures of battles of the Rebels and Federals in Mexico while actually under fire. Von Hoffman is now an American citizen.

Amazing Claim by a Clergyman:



REV. HOLDEN E. SAMPSON.

"Suddenly I found myself emerging from my body. I stood over it. I examined its organization and structure, saw the various organs performing their functions."

"I saw Heaven and Hell in the living spirit"

INTO the matter-of-fact world of today, with its insistence on realities, its skepticism and its impationce with everything smacking of the mystic and the supernatural, there has come a man who, with the earnestness of a Dante, a Swedenborg or a Mohammed, asserts that he has visited Heaven and Hell and has held converse with angels and demons.

He is the Rev. Holden Edward Sampson, a clergyman of the Church of England, a highly educated and cultured gentleman. He recently arrived in the United States from South Africa, where, he asseverates, he left his body in a cave while he journeyed with an escort of spirit messengers to the Throne of the Universe. He is a scientist who has been graduated from science, a skeptic who became skeptical of skepticism, a socialist who sees no ray of hope in scientific socialism, a spiritualist who has passed beyond spiritualism.

He is 55 years old, but doesn't look it. It is easy to believe his friends who say that he is growing young; or his barber, who says that his heavy shock of white hair is turning black. He has none of the stage props of the mystic who wants to mystify. When urged he tells his experience and doesn't ask you to believe in him. He tells you you may be "initiated" too.

"The world has followed dogmatic authority long enough," he says. "When science was divorced from religion, religion ceased to fullfil its purpose. It simply called on the people to believe unquestioningly. Science, on the other hand, was not content to believe. It wanted to know. So it began to study phenomena and to guess.

"Mysticism brings religion and science together again. Instead of being content with forms and sacraments, it seeks the divine mysteries which those forms and sacraments typify. Instead of studying phenomena to find knowledge, it leads man to the center of all knowledge and thus explains the phenomena. Far from being an impractical, visionary, useless study of unessential things, mysticism is the only absolutely practical method of attaining wisdom to carry us through the world of affairs."

Only when pressed will Mr. Simpson talk concretely about the actual happenings in the cave. Like Paul, who was caught up in Paradise and heard "words which it is not lawful for man to utter," the true mystic, he says, will rarely be drawn out to speak of his experience.

"My whole life was a preparation for it," he said. "I had a constant longing for first-hand demonstration of spiritual truths which scholasticism passively accepted and actively opposed. We were supposed to believe in spirits good and bad, in inspirations and visions and miracles; but we were supposed to believe in them as existing only in the past. This did not satisfy me.

"I began a study of spiritualism. Eliminating the fraud, I found that actual beings from another plane do appear through mediums. Then I made the discovery that these beings were not always the spirits of the departed, but generally pernicious liars of the astral plane who would go to all lengths of deception in order to appear on earth. Their influence, I found, was altogether evil.

"Next I tried an ouija board, groping blindly for unseen guidance. I experimented a week. Then I received a message: 'Emanuel, thy guide, is with thee. Cease the present means. Write at my guidance on paper. Deal no longer with spiritualism. It can teach you no more.'

"From that moment I wrote at my guide's dictation. He revealed himself as Dr. Asa Mahan, an American, one-time president of Oberlin University, a former teacher from whom I had learned all that I treasured of divine knowledge. Later I ceased to write. I had become clairaudient and he and his associates taught me through oral discourses as audible as a bell at night.

"They gave me the right teaching on the doctrines of the Catholic faith, of the Hindoo, Brahmin and Buddhist religions, of the ancient Hebrew and Kaballic philosophy. They familiarized me with the teachings of the Egyptian, Greek and Chaldean masters.

"They taught me the wonderful properties of ether, truths confirmed by Sir Oliver Lodge and his scientific associates several years later through their laborious laboratory methods. And they taught me truths about the constitution and government of the cosmos which science by unending study of phenomena could not possibly grasp.

"I graduated in time from this occult college. I had no need for further instruction. By sinking my own mind into my own soul I could now reproduce the all-truth. Of course, the world still demands from a preacher that he plagiarize from some accepted 'authority,' and it is as hazardous as ever for a prophet to utter a direct revelation.

"I went to South Africa under the guidance of those mystic influences," he went on. "I was there during the Boer war, in the absurd position of a pro-Boer Englishman writing editorials for an Imperialist newspaper and as a missionary to the Kaffirs.

"Afterward, I made my home in a cave. This was on a jagged hillside twenty miles from Pieter Maritzburg, the nearest settlement. I was not half sheltered from the elements. I went without food or drink at intervals for as much as two weeks at a time. I was warned by my spiritual teachers that the time was approaching when I should be initiated in the holy mysteries, and this denial of the demands of the flesh was the physical preparation.

"One night, forewarned by my instructors, I stretched myself upon the floor of the cave. Gradually I fell into a deep but conscious sleep.

"Suddenly I felt myself emerging from my body. I stood over it. I examined its organization and structure, saw the various organs performing their natural functions. A fine ray of wonderful light went from me to the corpse-like figure on the floor. Wherever I went, it connected us. I learned that this once broken would mean instant death to the body and its speedy dissolution.

"I found myself presently on a new plane of life. The whole material plane in which I had been functioning receded from me into mist-like shadow. I began to see spirit thinks objectively, just as I had once seen only material things.

"I discovered that I was not alone. I was being escorted, protected by beautiful translucent beings. The astral plane, or Hades, is fraught with dangers. It is the abode of spirits of darkness, malignant and pernicious spiritual brigands who prey upon mortals and make victims of passing ghosts. That is why the company of heaven protects the souls of the good while passing through Hades, conveying them in due time to their planetary Paradises.

"I was wafted upward through the crowded regions of Hades to the planetary circles. I talked with souls discarnate and helped some to come with me to Paradise. Many, I found, remain in purgatory, unable to reach the pure state which loosens the earth grip and liberates them for translation to Paradise.

"I visited the darkest prisons of Hades and ministered to the release of souls bound by their sins to wander in the regions of Tartarus. Through the higher zones of Hades I was uplifted and saw the bright places where happy souls waited their translation to the mansions of the blessed in the planetary spheres of Paradise."

This is an outline of the system under which, according to the clergyman, the heavens are constituted: There are seven temples in the heavenly spheres in which the rites of initiation are performed, one temple in each of the seven planetary circles, each answering to one of the seven mysteries, representing one of the seven gates in the path of the mystic. Earthly counterparts of these initiations are familiar to hundreds of thousands of lodge members all over the world. The seven sacraments of the church are also counterparts, says the mystic, and are but empty rites except as they give an earthly seal to the actual opening of the seven mysteries. Only through the trance or "ecstasis," after a renunciation of the flesh and due ordeals, may the neophyte be brought to the mysteries of the planetary circles, taking the several "degrees" in the several times of his "ecstasis."

But the mystic came back to earth. He saw people struggling as ever for the bare necessities of life. He saw a struggle for existence, necessary, inexorable. He saw it governed by worldly wisdom and common sense. And he saw results of that struggle which neither worldly wisdom nor common sense could justify.

OUT OF THE DEPTHS

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS

A father comes from the grave to save his daughter and her lover from deadly peril

DUST and wind had subsided; there seemed to be a hint of rain in the starless west.

Because the August evening had become oppressive, the club windows stood wide open as though gaping for the outer air. Rugs and curtains had been removed; an incandescent light or two accentuated the emptiness of the rooms; here and there, shadowy servants prowled, gilt buttons sparkling through the obscurity, their footsteps on the bare floor intensifying the heavy quiet.

Into this week's-end void wandered young Shannon, drifting aimlessly from library to corridor, finally entering the long room where the portraits of dead governors smirked through the windows at the deserted avenue.

As his steps echoed on the rugless floor, a shadowy something detached itself from the depths of a padded armchair by the corner window; and a voice he recognized greeted him by name.

"You here, Harrod!" he exclaimed. "Thought you were at Bar Harbor."

"I was. I had business in town."

"Do you stay here long?"

"Not long," said Harrod slowly.

Shannon dropped into a chair with a yawn which ended in a groan.

"Of all the God-forsaken places," he began, "a New York club in August."

Harrod touched an electric button, but no servant answered the call.

Presently Shannon, sprawling in his chair, jabbed the button with the ferrule of his walking stick, and a servant took the order, repeating as though he had not understood: "Did you say two, sir?"

"With olives dry," nodded Shannon irritably.

They sat there in silence until the tinkle of ice aroused them, and—"Double luck to you," muttered Shannon; then, with a scarcely audible sigh, "Bring two more and bring a dinner card." And turning to the older man, "You're dining, Harrod?"

"If you like."

A servant came and turned on an electric jet; Shannon scanned the card under the pale radiance, scribbled on the pad and handed it to the servant.

"Did you put down my name?" asked Harrod, curiously.

"No, you'll dine with me—if you don't mind."

"I don't mind—for this last time."

"Going away again?"

"Yes."

Shannon signed the blank and glanced up at his friend. "Are you well?" he asked abruptly.

Harrod lying deep in his leather chair nodded.

"Oh, you're rather white around the gills. We'll have another."

"I thought you had cut that out, Shannon."

"Cut what out?"

"Drinking."

"Well, I haven't," said Shannon sulkily, lifting his glass and throwing one knee over the other.

"The last time I saw you, you said you would cut it," observed Harrod.

"Well, what of it?"

"Well, you haven't?"

"No, my friend."

"Can't you stop?"

"I could—now. Tomorrow—I don't know—but I know well enough I couldn't day after tomorrow. And day after tomorrow I shall not care."

A short silence and Harrod said: "That's why I came back here."

"What?"

"To stop you."

Shannon regarded him in sullen amazement.

A servant announcing dinner brought them to their feet; together they walked out into the empty dining room and seated themselves by an open window.

Presently Shannon looked up with an impatient laugh.

"For heaven's sake let's be cheerful Harrod. If you knew how the infernal town has got on my nerves."

"That's what I came back for, too," said Harrod, with his strange white smile. "I knew the world was fighting you to the ropes."

"It is; here I stay on, day after day, on the faint chance of something doing." He shrugged his shoulders. "Business is worse than dead; I can't hold on much longer. You're right, the world has hammered me to the ropes, and it will be down and out for me unless"——

"Unless you can borrow on your own terms?"

"Yes, but I can't."

"You are mistaken."

"Mistaken? Who will"——

"I will."

"You! Why, man, do you know how much I need? Do you know for how long I shall need it? Do you know what the chances are of my making good? You! Why, Harrod, I'd swamp you! You can't afford"——

"I can afford anything—now."

Shannon stared: "You have struck something?"

"Something that puts me beyond want." He fumbled in his breast pocket, drew out a portfolio, and from the flat leather case he produced a numbered check bearing his signature, but not filled out.

"Tell them to bring pen and ink," he said.

Shannon, perplexed, signed to a waiter. When the ink was brought, Harrod motioned to Shannon to take the pen. "Before I went to Bar Harbor," he said, "I had a certain sum"—he hesitated, mentioned the sum in a low voice and asked Shannon to fill in the check for that amount. "Now blot it, pocket it and use it," he added listlessly, looking out into the lamplighted street.

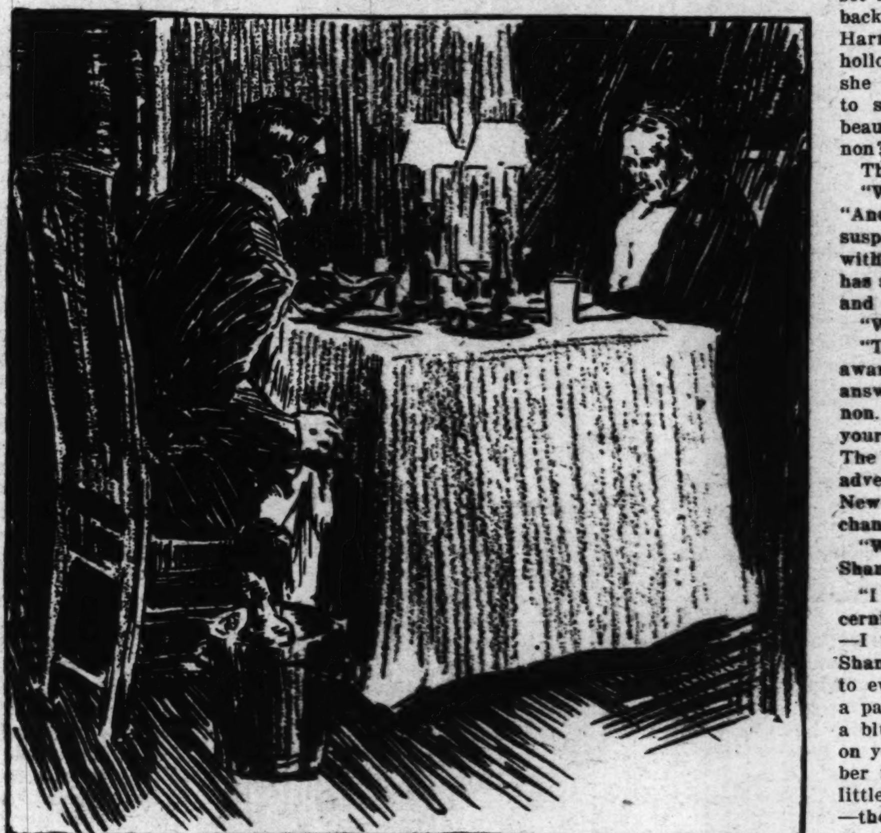
Shannon, whiter than his friend, stared at the bit of perforated yellow paper.

"I can't take it," he stammered—"my security is rotten. I tell you"——

"I want no security! I—I am beyond want," said Harrod. "Take it; I came back here for this—partly for this."

"Came back here to—to—help me!"

"To help you, Shannon. I had been a lonely man in life; I think you never realized how much your friendship has been to me. I had nobody—no intimacies. You never understood—you with all your friends—that I cared more for our casual companionship than for anything in the world."



"I can't take it," he stammered; "my security is rotten, I tell you."

Shannon bent his head. "I did not know it," he said.

Harrod raised his eyes and looked up at the starless sky; Shannon ate in silence; into his young face, already marred by dissipation, a strange light had come. And little by little order began to emerge from his whirling senses; he saw across an abyss a bridge glittering, and beyond that, beckoning to him through a white glory, all that his heart desired.

"I was at the ropes," he muttered; "how could you know it, Harrod? I never whined"——

"I know more than I did—yesterday," said Harrod, resting his pale face on one thin hand.

Shannon, nerves on edge, all aquiver, the blood racing through every vein, began to speak excitedly: "It's like a dream—one of the blessed sort—Harrod! Harrod! the dreams I've had this last year! And I try—I try to understand what has happened—what you have done for me. I can't—I'm shaking all over, and I suppose I'm sitting here eating and drinking, but"——

He touched his glass blindly; it tipped and crashed to the floor, the breaking froth of the wine hissing on the cloth.

"Harrod! Harrod! What sort of a man am I to deserve this of you? What can I do"——

"Keep your nerve—for one thing."

"I will!—you mean that!" touching the stem of the new glass, which the waiter had brought and was filling. He struck the glass till it rang out a clear, thrilling, crystalline note, then struck it more sharply. It splintered with a soft splashing crash. "Is that all?" he laughed.

"No, not all."

"What more will you let me do?"

"One thing more. Tell them to serve coffee below."

They passed out of the dining room, through the deserted corridors, and descended the stairway to the lounging room. It was unlighted and empty; Shannon stepped back and the elder man passed him and took the corner chair by the window—the same seat where Shannon had first seen him sitting 10 years before, and where he always looked to find him after the ending of a business day. And continuing his thoughts the younger man spoke aloud impulsively: "I remember perfectly well how we met. Do you? You had just come back to town from Bar Harbor, and I saw you stroll in and seat yourself in that corner, and because I was sitting next you, you asked if you might include me in your order—do you remember?"

"Yes, I remember."

"And I told you I was a new member here, and you pointed out the portraits of all those dead governors of the club, and told me what good fellows they had been. I found out later that you yourself were a governor of the club."

"Yes—I was."

Harrod's shadowy face swerved toward the window, his eyes resting on the familiar avenue, empty now save for the policeman opposite, and the ragged children of the poor. In August the high tide from the slums washes Fifth avenue, stranding a grasping flotsam at the threshold of the absent.

"And I remember, too, what you told me," continued Shannon.

"What?" said Harrod, turning noiselessly to confront his friend.

"About that child. Do you remember? That beautiful child you saw? Don't you remember that you told me how she used to leave her governess and talk to you on the rocks"——

"Yes," said Harrod. "That, too, is why I came back here to tell you the rest. For the evil days have come to her, Shannon, and the years draw nigh. Listen to me."

There was a silence; Shannon, mute and perplexed, set his coffee on the window and leaned back, flicking the ashes from his cigar; Harrod passed his hands slowly over his hollow temples. "Her parents are dead; she is not yet 20; she is not equipped to support herself in life; and—she is beautiful. What chance has she, Shannon?"

The other was silent

"What chance?" repeated Harrod. "And when I tell you that she is unsuspicious, and that she reasons only with her heart, answer me; what chance has she with a man? For you know men, and so do I, Shannon, so do I."

"Who is she, Harrod?"

"The victim of divorced parents—awarded to her mother. Let her parents answer; they are answering now, Shannon. But their plea is no concern of yours. What concerns you is the living. The child, grown to womanhood, is here, advertising for employment—here in New York, asking for a chance. What chance has she?"

"When did you learn this?" asked Shannon soberly.

"I learned it tonight—everything concerning her—tonight an hour before I—I met you. That is why I returned. Shannon, listen to me attentively; listen to every word I say. Do you remember a passing fancy you had this spring for a blue-eyed girl you met every morning on your way downtown? Do you remember that, as the days went on, little by little, she came to return your glance?—then your smile?—then, at last, your greeting? And do you remember, once, that you told me about it in a moment of depression—told me that you were close to infatuation, that you believed her to be everything sweet and innocent, that you dared not drift any further, knowing the chances and knowing the end—bitter unhappiness either way, whether in guilt or innocence"——

"I remember," said Shannon hoarsely. "But that is not—cannot be"——

"That is the girl."

"Not the child you told me of"——

"Yes."

"How—when did you know"——

"Tonight. I know more than that, Shannon. You will learn it later. Now ask me again, what is it that you may do."

"I ask it," said Shannon under his breath. "What am I to do?"

For a long while Harrod sat silent, staring out of the dark window, then: "It is time for us to go."

"You wish to go out?"

"Yes; we will walk together for a little while—as we did in the old days, Shannon—only a little while, for I must be going back."

"Where are you going, Harrod?"

But the elder man had already risen and moved toward the door; and Shannon picked up his hat and followed him out across the dusky lamplighted street.

Into the avenue they passed under the white, unsteady radiance of arc lights which drooped like huge lilies from stalks of bronze; here and there the front of some hotel lifted like a cliff, its window-pierced facade pulsating with yellow light, or a white marble mass, cold and burned out, spread a sea of shadow over the glimmering asphalt. At times the lighted lamps of cabs flashed in their faces; at times figures passed like specters; but into the street where they were now turning where neither lamps nor people nor sound, nor any light, save, far in the obscure vista, a dull hint of lightning edging in the west.

Twice Shannon had stopped, peering at Harrod, who neither halted nor slackened his steady, noiseless pace, and the younger man, hesitating, moved on again, quickening his steps to his friend's side.

"Where are—are you going?"

"Do you not know?"

The color died out of Shannon's face; he spoke again, forming his words slowly, with dry lips: "Harrod, why—why do you come into this street—tonight? What do you know? How do you know? I tell you I—I can-

> "'HOW he knew my peril and yours, God knows. But he came like fate and held his buckler before me, and he led me here and set a flaming sword before your door—the door of the child he loved—there on the sea rocks—10 years ago. Do you remember? He said you would.'" not endure this—this tension"——

"She is enduring it."

"Good God!"

"Yes, God is good," said Harrod, turning his haggard face as they halted. "Answer me, Shannon, where are we going?"

"To—her. You know it! Harrod! Harrod! How did you know? I—I did not know, myself, until an hour before I met you—I had not seen her in weeks—I had not dared to—for all trust in self was dead. Today, downtown, I faced the crash and saw across tomorrow the end of all. Then, in my journey hellward tonight, just at dusk, we passed each other, and before I understood what I had done we were side by side. And almost instantly—I don't know how—she seemed to sense the ruin before us both—for mine was heavy on my soul, Harrod, as I stood, measuring damnation with smiling eyes—at the brink of it, there. And she knew I was adrift at last."

He looked up at the house before him. "I said I would come. She neither assented nor denied me, nor asked a question. But in her eyes, Harrod, I saw what one sees in the eyes of children, and it stunned me * * * What shall I do?"

"Go to her and look again," said Harrod. "That is what I have come back to ask of you. Good-by."

He turned, his shadow face drooping, and Shannon followed to the avenue. There, in the white outbreak of electric lamps, he saw Harrod again as he had always known him, a hint of a smile in his worn eyes, the well-shaped mouth edged with laughter, and he was saying: "It's all in a lifetime, Shannon—and more than you suspect—much more. You have not told me her name yet?"

"I do not know it."

"Ah, she will tell you if you ask. Say to her that I remember her there on the sea rocks. Say to her that I have searched for her always, but that it was only tonight I knew what tomorrow she shall know—and you, Shannon, you, too, shall know. Good-by."

"Harrod! Wait. Don't—don't go"——

He turned and looked back at the younger man with that familiar gesture he knew so well.

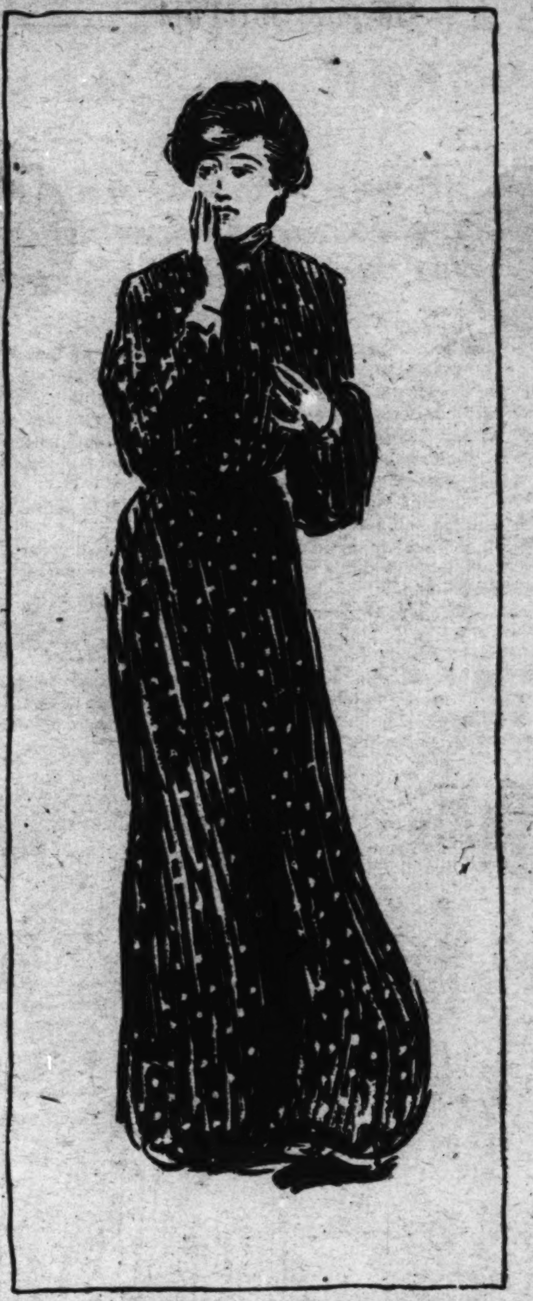
It was final, and Shannon swung blindly on his heel and entered the street again, eyes raised to the high lighted windows under which he had halted a moment before. Then he mounted the steps, groped in the vestibule for the illuminated number, and touched the electric knob. The door swung open noiselessly as he entered, closing behind him with a soft click.

Up he sped, mounting stair on stair, threading the narrow hallways, then upward again, until of a sudden she stood confronting him, bent forward, white hands tightening on the banisters.

Neither spoke. She straightened slowly, fingers relaxing from the polished rail. Over her shoulders he saw a lamplighted room, and she turned and looked backward at the threshold and covered her face with both hands.

"What is it?" he whispered, bending close to her. "Why do you tremble? You need not. There is nothing in all the world you need fear. Look into my eyes. Even a child may read them now."

Her hands fell from her face and their eyes met, and what she read in his, and he in hers, God knows, for she swayed where she stood, lids closing; yielding hands and lips and throat and hair. She cried, too, later, her hands on his shoulders, where he knelt beside her, holding him at arm's length from her fresh young face to search his for the menace she once had read there. But it was gone—that menace she had read and vaguely understood, and she cried a little more, one arm around his head pressed close to her side.



"Her hands fell from her face and their eyes met."

"From the very first—the first moment I saw you," he said, under his breath, answering the question aquiver on her lips—lips divinely merciful, repeating the lovers' creed and the confession of faith for which, perhaps, all souls in love are shriven in the end.

"Naida! Naida!"—he had learned her name and could not have enough of it—"all that the world holds for me of good is here, circled by my arms. Not mine the manhood to win out, alone—but there is a man who came to me tonight and stood sponsor for the failing soul within me.

"How he knew my peril and yours, God knows. But he came like fate and held his buckler before me, and he led me here and set a flaming sword before your door—the door of the child he loved—there on the sea rocks—10 years ago. Do you remember? He said you would. And he is no archangel—this man among men, this friend with whom, unknowing, I have this night wrestled face to face. His name is Harrod."

"My name!" She stood up straight and pale, within the circle of his arms; he rose, too, speechless, uncertain—then faced her, white and appalled.

She said: "He—he followed us to Bar Harbor. I was a child, I remember. I hid from my governess and talked with him on the rocks. Then he went away. I—I lost my father." Staring at her, his stiffening lips formed a word, but no sound came.

"Bring him to me!" she whispered. "How can he know I am here and stay away? Does he think I have forgotten? Does he think shame of me? Bring him to me."

She caught his hands in hers and kissed them passionately; she framed his face in her small hands of a child and looked deep, deep into his eyes. "Oh, the happiness you have brought! I love you! You with whom I am to enter paradise. Now bring him to me!"

Shaking, amazed, stunned, in a whirl of happiness and doubt, he crept down the black stairway, feeling his way. The doors swung noiselessly; he was almost running when he turned into the avenue. The trail of white lights starred his path; the solitary street echoed his haste, and now he sprang into the wide doorway of the club, and as he passed, the desk clerk leaned forward, handing him a telegram. He took it, halted, breathing heavily, and asked for his friend.

"Mr. Harrod?" repeated the clerk; "Mr. Harrod has not been here in a month, sir."

"What? I dined with Mr. Harrod here at 8 o'clock!" he laughed.

"Sir? I—I beg your pardon, sir, but you dined here alone tonight"——

"Send for the steward!" broke in Shannon impatiently, slapping his open palm with the yellow envelope. The steward came, followed by the butler, and to a quick question from the desk clerk replied: "Mr. Harrod has not been in the club for six weeks."

"But I dined with Mr. Harrod at 8! Wilkins, did you not serve us?"

"I served you, sir; you dined alone"—the butler hesitated, coughed discreetly; and the steward added: "You ordered for two, sir"——

Something in the steward's troubled face silenced Shannon; the butler ventured: "Beg pardon, sir, but we—the waiters thought you might be—ill, seeing how you talked to yourself and called for ink to write upon the cloth and broke two glasses, laughing like"——

Shannon staggered, turning a ghastly visage from one to another. Then his dazed gaze centered upon the telegram crushed in his hand, and shaking from head to foot, he smoothed it out and opened the envelope.

But it was purely a matter of business; he was requested to come to Bar Harbor and receive a check drawn to his order, and perhaps aid to identify the body of a drowned man in the morgue.

What Will War Cost American Business?

Our coffee trade is almost exclusively with Brazil, and there is no serious danger that our commerce with that country will be interrupted. Whatever auxiliary supplies of sugar we may need are at our very doors.

Observers say, however, that in spite of the fact that the United States is actually a self-supporting nation, it would be idle to suppose that the European war will not cause us to feel the pinch of higher prices. It is impossible to destroy thousands of millions of dollars worth of property in any part of the world without all the rest of the world feeling it.

Undoubtedly Europe is going to demand foodstuffs from us at such a rate that prices will have to ascend. And if the man who makes shoes has to pay more money than ever before for his bread, he naturally is going to charge more money than ever before for his shoes.

Among the articles which have already shown marked advances in prices because a large part of them is imported may be mentioned the following:

Toothbrushes, hairbrushes, books and eyes, hair nets, ostrich feathers, crude rubber, furs, Turkish and Egyptian cigarette tobacco, cigar bands, art pottery, imported whiskies, wines and cordials, tin, antimony, delicatessen.

The first few days of the European war saw a marked rise in the prices of table articles. Imported stuffs, such as Swiss cheese, sardines, etc., immediately reached war prices. Sugar, coffee, tea, spices, etc., followed with a scarcely less rapid advance. Even in the face of these sharp increases, retailers who were able to do so laid in enough stock to last them five or six months, anticipating a much greater increase. Sugar alone advanced $1.65 a hundred pounds in two weeks.

The advance of flour, while marked, was not at all in proportion, being about 50 cents a hundred pounds for the same two weeks. Knowledge that the country was about to harvest the greatest wheat crop in years sufficiently explains this.

Beans in two days jumped from $2.18 to $3.60 a bushel and retailers reported it was almost impossible to get them. The coffee advance in the same period was about 15 per cent, while that of tea was 20 per cent.

To compensate for these sudden increases, business experts declared there would soon be a corresponding decrease in the price of things made in this country for export. Apples, prunes and other native fruits were expected to show a sharp decline. There was a possibility also that the shoe prices would be lower, because New England factories which do an enormous export business were expected to throw their products on an already well satisfied local market.

Cotton goods, it was expected, would be lower for a similar reason, although woolens might be higher, because much of our best woolens is imported from Great Britain.

All things and all points of view considered, it appears reasonable to conclude that the next few months will witness a sharp rise in prices in general, but that it will be followed by such a general increase in business as ultimately to spell great prosperity for the American people, at least when their lot is compared with that of the peoples in war-stricken Europe.

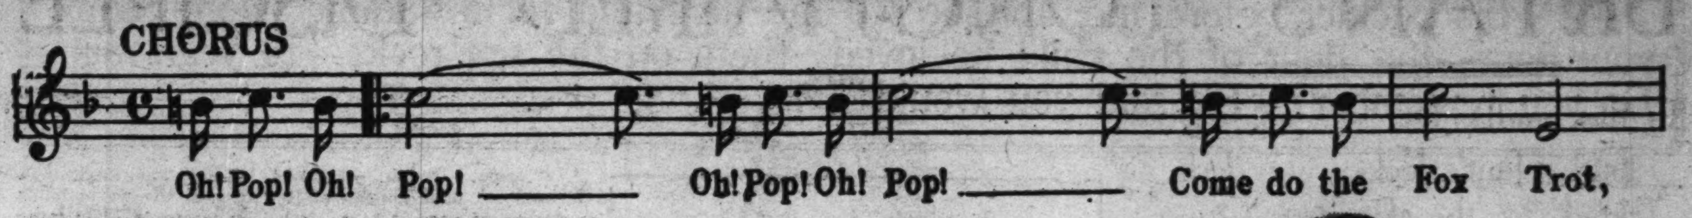
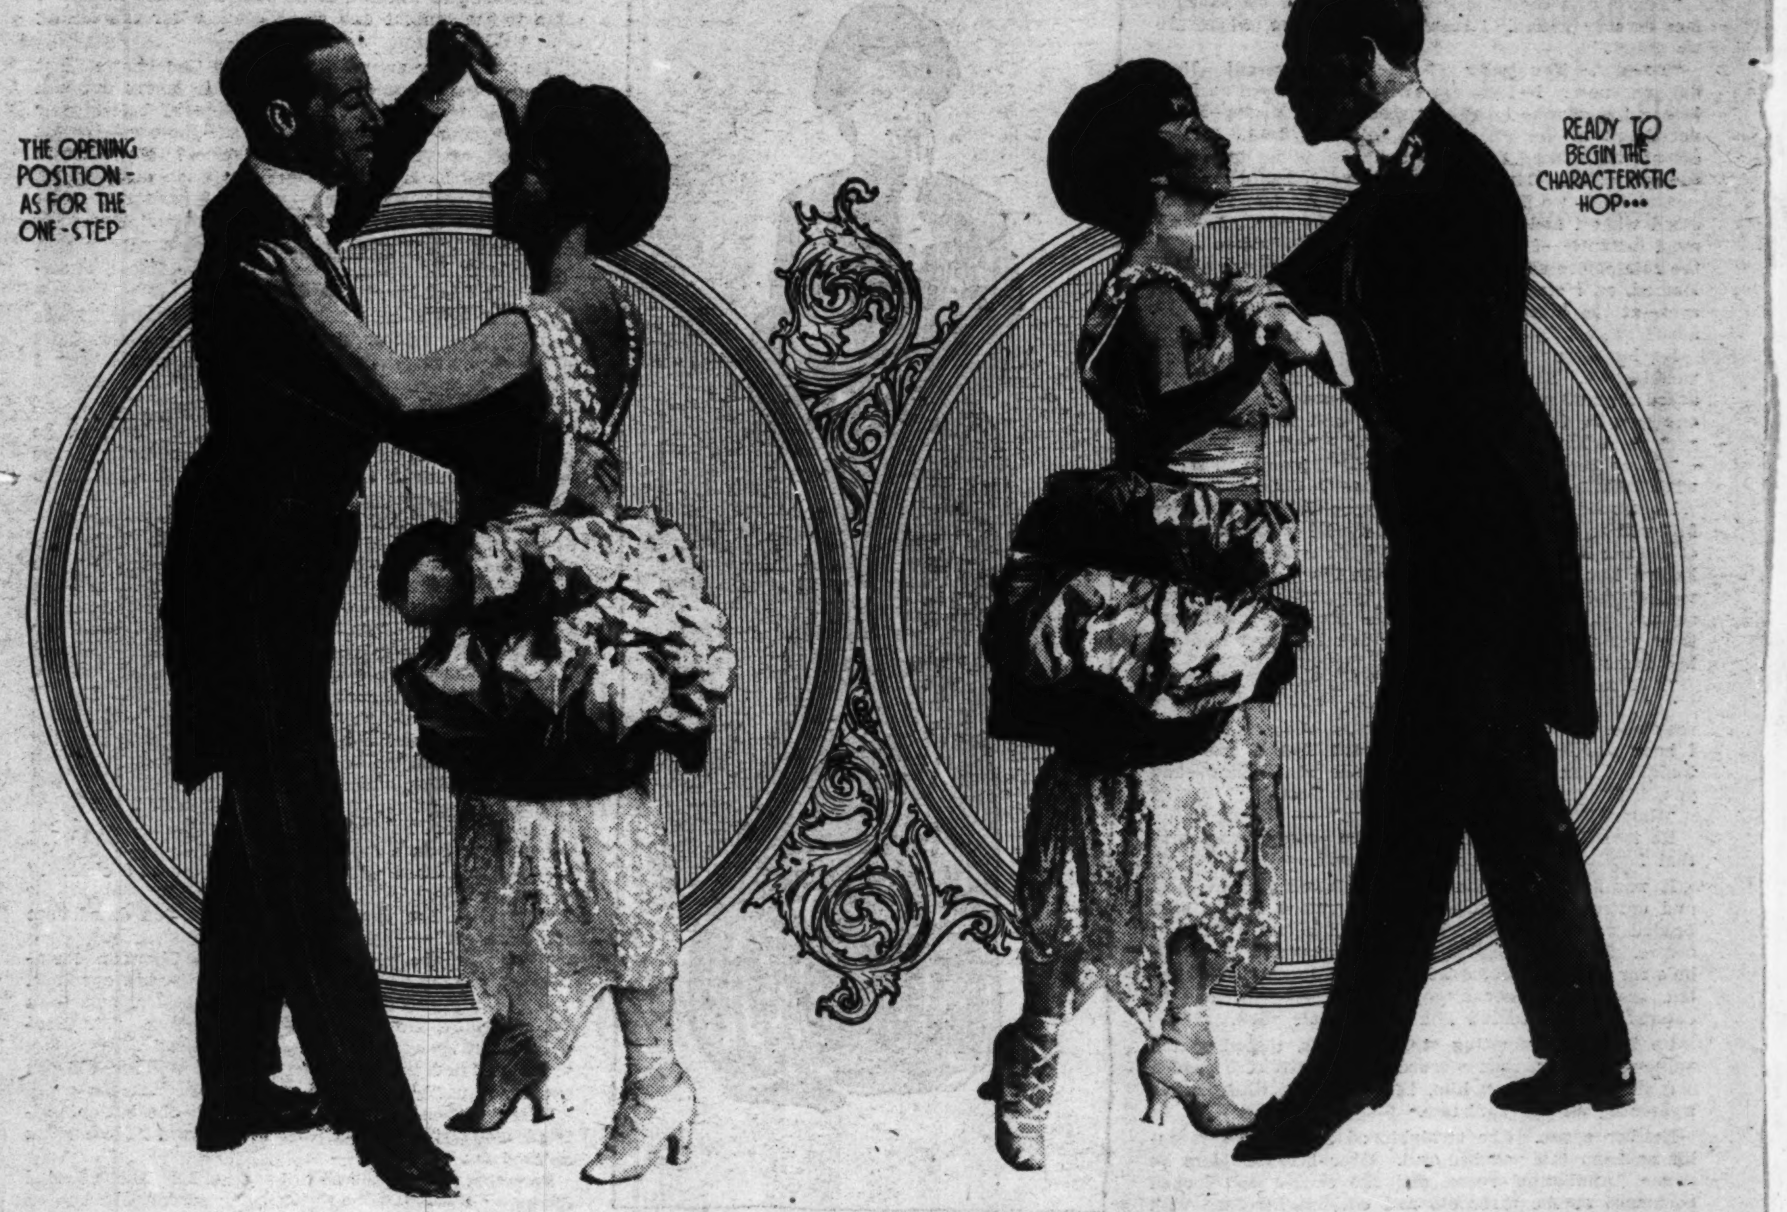
NOW FOR THE NATIONAL TANGO!



CHORUS
Oh! Pop! Oh! Pop! ______ Oh! Pop! Oh! Pop! ______ Come do the Fox Trot,



THE OPENING POSITION—AS FOR THE ONE-STEP

READY TO BEGIN THE CHARACTERISTIC HOP...

St. Louis and Oshkosh, New York and Kokomo, must tread popular step according to same formula, runs proclamation of Dancing Masters' Association—Hitherto confusion has existed because each city had its own different "tango"—Coming of the Half-and-Half, Furlana and Canter Waltz. . . . .

WHILE coming debutantes are passing the long summer days in warm weather pleasures, St. Louis dancing instructors are standardizing the modern dance movements so that everyone will tango alike at their coming-out parties this winter. They are arranging a series of steps which will be called "national steps," because approved by the National Association of Dancing Masters at a recent convention.

Henceforward, if the girl from Kokomo, or Dallas, or Medicine Hat studies the national dance steps, she will feel as much at ease in a St. Louis or New York ballroom as in the dance hall over the corner drug store in her own home town—for the steps of all dances will be thought the same all over the country the coming year.

Such was not the case during the past two years. With the introduction of the tango, the maxixe, the furlana and other ultra-modern movements, each teacher taught practically a different set of steps. What was tango in Oshkosh was a Bowery hop in St. Louis, possibly, and the maxixe taught here was looked upon as a cabaret wiggle by citizens of the staid, small cities.

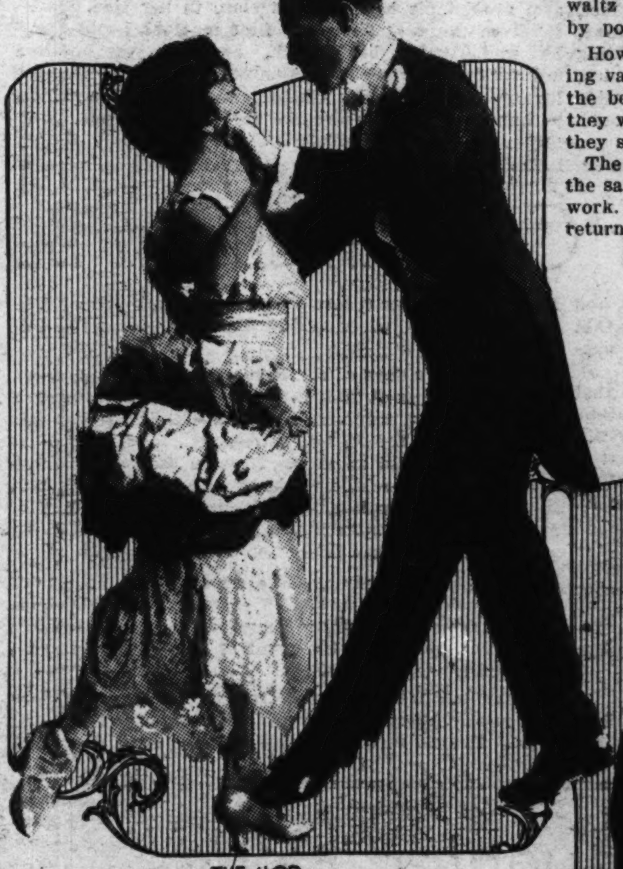
Then the Castles paid a flying visit to St. Louis and introduced what they termed the genuine Argentine one-step—fumigated and deodorized—which many who had studied the tango under local teachers could not possibly dance without further instruction.

It was a case of pick your instructor and learn his dance, not THE dance.

As a result, in many instances, the New York visitor to St. Louis could not dance the maxixe here unless she brought her partner or was lucky enough to find a man who knew the identical steps she had acquired.

The difference in the steps was noted in St. Louis. It was common talk that during the last season many a couple spent a preliminary half-hour at the girl's home preceding the ball, standardizing their own steps. And then in many cases when the ball started they found that they had to dance together the rest of the evening, as no one knew their steps!

Quite naturally, ballrooms and dance halls became a riot of wriggling "raggers," no dozen couples moving alike. This couple dipped too much and that one wriggled the shoulders and hips "more than the law allowed."



THE HOP

So the dancing masters called a council in the association convention in Cleveland last June, and it was decided to adopt "national steps" for every new dance out.

The question then arose: whose authority shall we take?

This was decided by the members solving the problem like an equation in algebra. They took the hesitation first.

They asked themselves: What is the hesitation waltz?

Answer: The hesitation waltz is a waltz in which you hesitate on one bar and then dance on the next.

Then find the true hesitation out of this maze of figures and a combination hesitation would be waltzed. Then by process of elimination, doing away with all movements which did not come within the limits of the original definition, the "national step" was reached.

And so with the one-step, the furlana, the half-and-half, the maxixe, and practically everything except the waltz and two-step, which were standardized years ago by popular choice.

However, dancing masters will not be averse to teaching variations to those who desire such; but in all cases the beginner will be taught the national step first. If they wish the combination steps later, all well and good, they shall have them—plenty and to spare.

The standardization of the steps is going forward with the same system that a great business association would work. Each member of the national association, upon returning to his home, called together all local dance

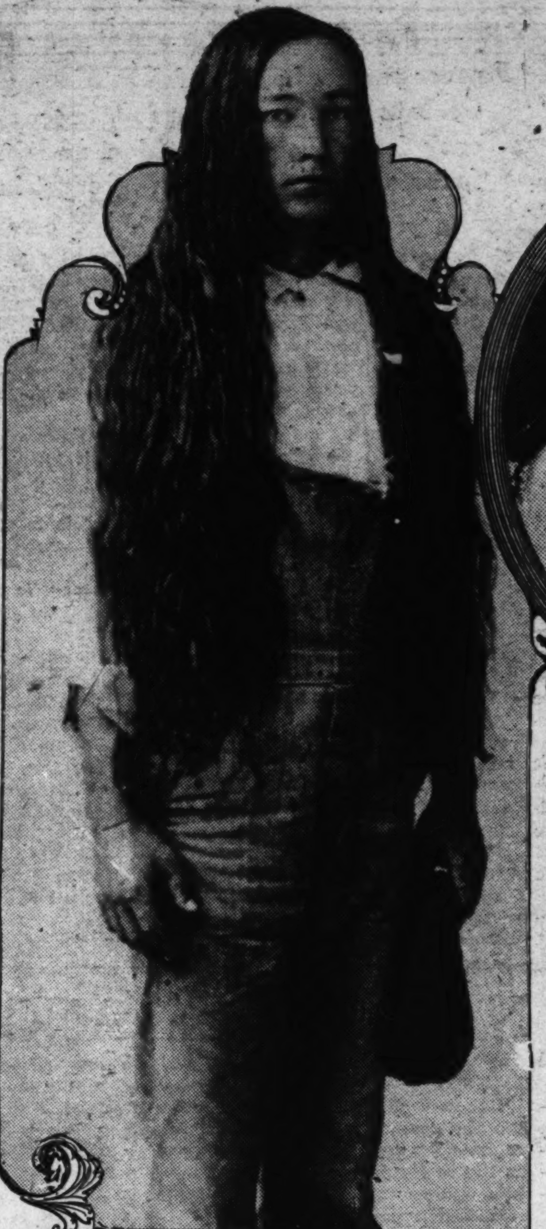
THE CROSS FOX-STEP

BRYAN'S LONG-HAIRED DISCIPLE

In the cradle, 18 years ago, Missouri infant's locks were dedicated to the Peerless One, with the vow that they should not be cut until he became President ❧ Tresses now 40 inches long, worn in braids and coiled under hat ❧ Youth hopes to give barber the job of his life in 1920 . . .



AT THE AGE OF THREE

William Jennings Bryan Wise and his 40-inch tresses.

LIKE the skeins of cords by which the Aztecs preserved their records, a history of American politics for the last 18 years is written in the Samson-like hair of William Jennings Bryan Wise of Crane, Stone County, Missouri.

In 1896 a young Lochinvar came out of the West, proclaimed to the world with passionate eloquence that he would not suffer mankind to be crucified upon a cross of gold, and galloped blithely away with the Democratic nomination for President safely ensconsed in his saddle. It is an old story of how hundreds of thousands of voters, captivated by that silver tongue and sensing the coming of a new birth of democracy and popular freedom, flocked to the polls and cast their ballots for William Jennings Bryan.

Among the humble but ardent disciples of the apostle of free silver was W. L. Wise, a carpenter at Crane. During the exciting campaign of 1896 he labored among his friends and neighbors, in a small but enthusiastic way, to win their votes for the Nebraskan.

Then came Nov. 4, with its tale of Democratic disaster. McKinley was victor and Bryan was vanquished. In the rank and file of the defeated party there was as intense disappointment as if they had been shown a glimpse of the millennium, only to have a curtain dropped abruptly upon that entrancing spectacle.

A month after the election, on Dec. 10, a son was born to Wise and his wife. It was natural, in a family so burning with loyalty to the lost cause, that from one of the women, Mrs. Wise's mother, Mrs. Ellen Scott, should have come the suggestion that the boy be named William Jennings Bryan.

But this pledge of fidelity was not sufficient for the fervor of the father. Innumerable male infants had been named for the Commoner. Wise determined that his son should be a unique monument to his faith in Bryan. And so he made a solemn vow that until Bryan should be seated in the presidential chair shears should not touch the child's hair.

AT THE AGE OF SEVEN

There were many cases in which disappointed Democrats and Populists forswore the barber, both as to hair and beard, until Bryan should become President; but this is the only instance on record in which a father passed the pledge on to his son, by a sort of vicarious vow.

Four years passed, and in 1900 Bryan again opposed McKinley in the presidential race. The Wise boy was now a lively little fellow, with curls clustering about his head. His father, looking upon them, confidently awaited the November day on which Bryan would be victorious, and prepared for the celebration in which his son's locks would be shorn and offered up on the altar of victory. But again McKinley was the conqueror, and Wise sadly informed the barber that the ceremony of shearing the boy's hair was postponed for another four years.

But in 1904 Bryan was not even a candidate. He had twice been defeated, and his party looked about for a leader embodying a fresher promise of victory. Despite Bryan's eloquent protest, the convention in St. Louis nominated Judge Alton B. Parker, representing, as his opponent charged, the reactionary wing of the Democrats, and launched him on a campaign against Theodore Roosevelt.

William Jennings Bryan Wise was now 8 years old, and his hair, innocent of the shears, was braided like a girl's, in pigtails which fell below his shoulders. Of course, these unusual adornments made him a target for the rude witticisms of his schoolfellows, who rejoiced in manly, closely cropped polls. The most obvious method of attack was to call him a "girl" and a "sissy," which are epithets of deadly insult among juvenile males.

The boy had many a wretched hour and waged many a pitched battle with his tormentors. But he, too, had inherited or absorbed some of the hard faith that was in his father, and knew that his long hair, marking him as a distinct individual among his fellows, was the symbol of a principle.

It was at this time that the child took upon himself the fulfillment of the vow which had been imposed upon him by his father. He made a sacred promise to himself that he would never permit his hair to be cut until Bryan should be President.

Still another four years passed, and the boy's growing tresses were a measurement of the Nebraskan's long-deferred presidential hopes. But in 1908 there were renewed auguries of work for the barber. The Democrats, in desperation, turned again to their old leader, and for the third time nominated Bryan. Roosevelt declined to make the race because of his opposition to what he called "a third consecutive term," and extorted from the Republican politicians the nomination of William Howard Taft.

Hope sprang again in the hearts of father and son. Three is a lucky number, and it was Bryan's third contest for the occupancy of the White House. At last, they thought, victory might be at hand. It is probable that the boy secretly yearned to rid himself of the girlish braids which hung from his head and made him conspicuous wherever he went, the subject of jeers and curious inquiries. But if so, he kept his disappointment to himself and steeled himself the more firmly in his vow, when the Rooseveltian prestige swept Taft into the presidential chair.

Inch by inch the boy's hair grew during the next four years, and with it grew the power and influence of the Democratic party. There came the split between Roosevelt and Taft and the organization of the Progressive party, which afforded to the Democrats their first assurance of victory since Cleveland's second term. Like many others, the Wises believed that Bryan, for his services in leading three forlorn hopes for the party, would be rewarded with the nomination, now that at last the charge could be thrust home across the enemy's bulwarks.

When the historic Democratic convention met at Baltimore in 1912 there were few more interested watchers from afar than the carpenter and his son in Stone County, Missouri. They beheld the sequel with mingled triumph and regret. For it soon proved that while Bryan dominated the convention by sheer force of his personality and popularity, he would be unable to nominate himself. He easily put to rout the forces of Speaker Clark, Tammany Hall and Wall street, but the prize went to the Governor of New Jersey, Woodrow Wilson.

So young Wise was doomed for another four years at least, or until he should be on the eve of casting his own first vote, to wear his tresses unshorn.

In the two years that have passed since President Wilson's election, they have found hope in Bryan's services on the world stage as Secretary of State, and are convinced that, although Wilson will probably be re-elected in 1916, Bryan will be his logical successor and will be elected in 1920. Young Wise will then be in his twenty-third year and may, in casting his first presidential ballot, contribute to his own emancipation from his vow.

His hair is now 40 inches long and falls, when loosened, to his hips. It is dark brown, of a fine, silken texture. He dresses it in braids, which are rolled into a coil on the back of his head and hidden under his hat. Like his father, he, too, is a carpenter.

THE MOTHER AND FATHER

VOW OF NAZARITE

ALTHOUGH they may be unaware of it, the vow made by W. L. Wise and his son that the latter's hair should not be cut until William Jennings Bryan is elected President is probably derived from the old vow of the Hebraic Nazarite. According to the law, three restrictions were laid upon the Nazarite: He may not cut the hair of his head, he may not take wine and he may not touch the dead. The most prominent outward mark of the Nazarite was long, flowing hair, which was cut at the expiration of the vow and offered as a sacrifice.

Samson was a Nazarite, and his superhuman strength lay in his long, unshorn locks. Samuel's mother promised to dedicate him to God during his whole life, saying: "There shall come no razor upon his head."

Last of War Correspondents

SINCE the days of Napoleon war correspondents, a term later enlarged to include photographers, have been regarded not merely as a burden on the general staff, which has quite enough on its hands without them, but also as a source of the gravest danger to the army. However carefully his dispatches may be censored the correspondent is certain to get in something that betrays the strategy of his side to the enemy.

In the Austro-Prussian War in 1866 the battle of Sadowa was fought and lost by the Austrians because a correspondent of the London Times with them forwarded the information that the army was encamped on the right bank of the Elbe. This seemed innocent enough, even to the Auserian censor; but it was a sufficient clew for the Prussians who based their movement on this fact and won.

Sherman's march to the sea, which had such disastrous results for the Confederacy, was determined upon after reading in Confederate newspapers some remarks by Jefferson Davis concerning the things his Generals had done and were going to do to Sherman. If the Confederates had done those things first and talked about them afterward, or if those newspapers had kept still, it is possible history might have been different. But the Confederate newspapers were of great value to the Union forces throughout the war.

In the same way newspapers in other nations have been of great use to one or both parties in a conflict. The history of every great campaign in the last century records instances of information that has affected the issue being given out by war correspondents. Photographs can betray secrets as well as written words.

Although this has been understood fully, and while most recent wars have been opened with emphatic assertions that this time the correspondents would be suppressed, no nation had the courage to carry out such threats until the Japanese showed to the world how much that was really important could be accomplished by a little courteous delay in furnishing credentials to correspondents. Even Japan did not venture to keep correspondents entirely out of the field. This time, though, it looks as if the correspondent and the photographer would really have a chance to stay at home.

"Co-operation the Secret of Success Today"

—GEORGE W. PERKINS

By George W. Perkins.

Former partner in firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. tells young men the modern tendency is against competition and in favor of doing things in groups, in large companies.

THE world you young men are confronting today is quite different in its conditions and relations to that your fathers and grandfathers had spread before them when, at your age, they were ready to begin their workaday careers. They asked: "How did my father succeed?" and inquired from him the rules which had guided him to success. And the rules your grandfather gave him were about the same as his own father had handed down to him. Today such precepts and even much that your textbooks and instructors have taught you, have little bearing on the practical business life of the world.

Within the generation a revolution has occurred. The extraordinary development of intercommunication, the express train and steamship, the cheap telegraph, the perfected telephone and wireless, accompanied by the wide diffusion of education, have given us a new world full of strange problems that cannot be solved by the old thumb-rule precedents.

A radical statement, you think, and you are not willing to throw over your father's ideas unless good reasons are given you for changing them.

Your fathers and your instructors will tell you that the first requisite of business is intercommunication. In the days of the ox team the radius of business was the area that could be covered by an ox team. One man with one store reached all the people he could serve. Then came the stage coach and, later, the primitive railway, each enlarging the business radius and increasing, too, the business unit. Small partnerships became great firms, which in their turn grew into corporations and then into giant organizations. Today, with the telephone and the wireless to do the trading, and with fast freight and flying ocean carriers to deliver the goods, a man or a group of men can barter and sell at almost any distance and with millions of people within a very few hours.

It was inevitable that the development of these wonderful devices should work a revolution in the conduct of business. When your fathers were your age, the telegraph and the cable were slow and expensive, the telephone in its infancy, wireless unknown and freight deliveries slow and inexact. Your grandfathers knew nothing of any of these instrumentalities. Therefore I repeat you are confronting a business life quite different to that of your predecessors and you must adjust yourself as well as possible to meet its exactions.

You are thinking perhaps that it is your fathers who have brought all these agencies to their high perfection and are using them every day in the transaction of their ordinary affairs and that your generation should require of you no more than to continue and progress in such usage. The instruments exist, you say, let us use them as our fathers are doing.

Following me a little further. The inventor who creates a new machine, and the men who put it to work do not always grasp the influence they exert on all the life around them. It is easier to practice than to grasp the great principles that are set in motion by new action.

The extraordinary development of intercommunication has done more than merely speed up business. It has speeded up thought. Your world wakes up every morning with full information of everything that has happened even in its remotest reaches. In the days of the oxcart, ideas moved at an ox pace. Today's world has yesterday's newly fledged theories at its breakfast table. In oxcart days information and ideas were the property of a few. Today popular education having furnished the means all men have access to all knowledge.

Moreover, while intercommunication by facilitating exchange of commodities was expanding the individual shopkeeper into the firm and the firm into the giant corporations, it was enlarging villages into towns, and towns into giant cities. As our storekeeper has become only a member of a great corporate entity, so the average man must merge his identity with that of the millions living around him. He cannot live to himself or be his own law. Nor can he have to himself rights or privileges he is not willing to accord his neighbors.

Intercommunication then has spread knowledge, abolished secrecy, clustered us in great masses, and keenly brought home to us our responsibilities to our fellowmen. For the maintenance of our common civilization we must live at peace with each other, and this you can only do according to the fair give-and-take principle of the golden rule.

Nowadays you are hearing a great deal about the New Freedom and about re-establishing the opportunities that young men had in the days of your fathers and grandfathers.

I ask you how this is possible when the basic conditions governing business and living have so completely changed? Since communication began, every action of an individual affected some other individual. Today the other individual knows it.

Therefore it behooves you young men who are about to enter life to learn to co-operate with your fellows. I use the term in its broadest possible sense—co-operative as opposed to competitive—co-operation as opposed to individualism. The distinct tendency of the world is to do things in groups, in large companies and through communities, enlarging all the time. The individual today is constantly giving way to the group or community. Not, mind you, in personal individuality or in ability to achieve or attain, but wheresoever it is necessary to bring about a better average condition for all members of the body politic.

The great art, then, you must acquire, if you are to succeed in this new world as your fathers did in the past, is to learn to get on with people, to respect the rights of others, to realize that you cannot get unless you give.

NOW FOR THE NATIONAL TANGO!

instructors in his or her respective town, told of the resolution and started to work.

A few weeks ago the members of the St. Louis Association of Dancing Masters met at the call of President F. L. Clendenen, and resolved to start the standardization immediately. Since then practically every member of the association in St. Louis has been busy getting the steps "nationalized."

"This is the first move made in five years by dancing instructors to uplift the art," Clendenen told the St. Louis association.

And the dances have been sterilized!

Even the name "tango" has been dropped by the ultra-fashionable instructors, and it will be called just what it is: one-step. And no more will the term "Castle walk" be heard, except from the sanctum sanctorum of Castle House itself.

As to the fumigation of the dances, and the uplift: The maxixe, which the Castles exhibited here in an acrobatic manner, will be more stately, more graceful. There will be less of the tigerish crouch on the part of the woman—more of the dignified attitude on the part of the man. The useless, cabaretic steps will be given over only to those who, wishing to appear different from hoi-poi, will make themselves devilishly daring.

As to the one-step: The ban on ragging, which all good halls and ballrooms enforced last season, will continue. Likewise the sinuously, python-like movements of the women, and the aggressively wanton steps of the men will be strictly taboo.

A vogue of popularity is predicted for the half-and-half, which, experts say, will surpass that of the tango.

But the bell of public opinion is already beginning to toll the death of the hesitation, they say. This is accounted for by the fact that it never really was new, as the hesitation waltz (or parts of its movements) has been known for years, and danced under other names in different parts of the country. Likewise, this is an age in which people live fast, work fast and play fast. The hesitation, by its very name, is too slow for them.

On the other hand, the furlana is coming in on a tide of popularity. It is new in a sense to America. But it was danced 300 years ago by the gondoliere of old Italy.

True, it is not an extremely fast dance, being danced to waltz time, moderato; but it is faster than the hesitation. And there is an atmosphere of romance clinging to it—bringing visions of folk dances in the moonlight on the border of the Mediterranean—of vintage festivals in the valleys, of dreamy summer evenings on the canals of Venice.

There is nothing nasty to the mental taste in the furlana—no recalling an immoral origin, such as devotees of the tango and the maxixe would forget.

The furlana will be taught and danced in St. Louis the coming season in a far different manner than the stage exponents have shown it. Being standardized, it will be as easy to learn as the old-fashioned waltz.

For those longing for novelty and something new, the Canter waltz will be offered in standardized fashion. The canter is nothing more than the opposite of the lame duck. The "duck" was done by dragging the man's right leg and his partner's left leg, giving the effect of the lame duck. The canter is done by the man rising on the ball of the left foot and his partner the same, giving a syncopated effect to the dance on every other step.

But unless the dancer takes pains in learning, the effect is liable to resemble the "duck" so much that it will be hard to tell the difference between the two.

The canter is danced either to one-step or hesitation time, but the former will be vastly more popular, as the dance in that time gives a feeling of playful romping to the dancers as they "canter" about the floor.

The Fox Trot is the newest dance craze. Anyone who can run can do the new steps. The music is four-four time and strongly syncopated. Assume the ordinary dancing position. Begin with a walk; the man, starting on the left foot, going forward. Keep this up for eight measures, pointing the toe out. Then break into the hop, doubling the time and dancing two steps to one beat of music. This naturally causes you to break into a short, lively little hop, which is not at all tiring, but rather exhilarating. Keep this up also for eight measures and then drop back into the long walk in time with the music. This is the dance as standardized, but, as a matter of fact, you can do each sort of step for as many measures as you please. You can do anything with the fox-trot that you can with the one-step. You can work in some serpentines, or a little grapevine, or the cross-fox, which is a very engaging variation.

Remarkable Criminal Trials Long Forgotten

forenoon the ship Crescent was sighted. Holmes made a signal with a blanket; it was seen and the survivors were picked up. Thus it happened that of the 17 crew and 65 passengers that sailed on the William Brown, the crew all reached rescue ships, but only 16 passengers survived.

When Holmes was tried in a United States court at Philadelphia, the prosecution was brought under an old statute, which provided a maximum punishment of three years' imprisonment for "unlawful but not malicious" manslaughter at sea. His defense was brilliantly conducted by some of the ablest lawyers of the time. Their contention was that it was the imperative duty of the seamen to sacrifice some lives rather than lose all and that the only hope of the surviving passengers lay in the possibility of having enough trained seamen left to man the boat.

The Judge instructed the jury, however, that the duty of a sailor was to protect the life of his passengers, even at the risk of his own. The jury was out 16 hours before it returned a verdict of guilty, and then it recommended clemency for the prisoner.

This case is typical of the kind of material Judge Lawson has chosen for his book. The lawyer-journalist combines with the true judicial temperament a highly dramatic manner of narrative, a style which, while extremely dignified, nevertheless lends itself to the emotions.

One case is the trial of a man for the murder of Elam Sands, a New York murder mystery of 1800, that never has been cleared, although it has been made the basis of a novel. There is the story of two men who were to be hanged in Massachusetts for piracy, one of them being reprieved on the gallows.

There is a case of a man who was acquitted of a murder charge when the evidence apparently proved his guilt, but the jury discharged him because of a misunderstanding of the Court's instructions. There is the case of a Protestant clergyman who was found guilty and hanged on a trumped up charge of inciting slaves to mutiny, the principal testimony tending to show he was a Roman Catholic. Two Salem witchcraft cases, in which persons were hanged on incredible evidence, furnish an interesting and extraordinary chapter.

What the author calls the most famous case recorded in the first volume is the acquittal of Judge Wilkinson and two friends of Mississippi for a murder at the Galt House in Louisville, Ky. This case is of peculiar interest because of the light it throws upon the dueling and armed punishment of insult codes of the early nineteenth century and because of the brilliant arguments of Sergeant S. Prentiss and others for the defense and Benjamin Hardin and others for the prosecution.

One other murder trial derives great interest out of the fact that associated as counsel for the defense were Alexander Hamilton and Aaron Burr, whose subsequent enmity was to have a tragic ending on the dueling ground. Other cases show that the slavery question was of vital importance and caused much shedding of blood, long before civil war was believed possible.

While such an undertaking as Judge Lawson's has no antecedent on this side of the Atlantic, it has two in Europe. One is Howell's "State Trials," in England, which begins with the treason trial of Sir Walter Raleigh in 1603 and ends with the trial of the Cato Street Conspirators in 1820. This work was afterwards supplemented by other authors under governmental direction, whose cases went back to 1830. In France a similar work, "Causes Celebres," has preserved much of the history of criminal jurisprudence in that country.

In compiling his information Judge Lawson has accumulated a vast store of printed information. He announces that when he has finished with this material it will be turned over to the law library of the University of Missouri.

AMAZING CLAIM OF A CLERGYMAN

"The worldly wisdom of the Roman Empire," says Mr. Sampson, "had taught the Romans to encourage all religions. They even enshrilled Jesus in the Pantheon. But they could not permit Christianity, this new communism, to convert institutions of Mammon, the real god of this worldly-wise old world. So they persecuted the Christians, not on account of their beliefs, but on account of their communistic society, which threatened to swallow Rome. As a result of the persecutions and the clever politics, mysticism was stamped out. The church became scholastic. Science and religion were divorced. And only by bringing the two together again will the Apostolic way be rediscovered."

It is for this that the strange but very human apostle has come to the United States. He is founding a mystical revival mission, or a church of the divine mysteries. He wants to carry on the work within the Protestant Episcopal Church. He doesn't know whether this will be permitted. In the meantime he has been lecturing to a very earnest following. There is no scholasticism in his teaching; and theosophists, new thoughtists and members of orthodox churches seem to be working in perfect harmony.

If the Church of the Divine Mysteries fulfils its mission it will proceed to abolish the struggle for existence. To the rich who are burdened with riches and the poor who are burdened with want it will make the same call: Give up everything. Renounce the world, Mammon.

It will not abolish the struggle for existence as an end in itself. That will be but an incident in the pursuit of the divine mysteries. Another incident will be the healing of the sick, the bringing of life and health to palsified bodies, the restoration of sight and hearing to the blind and deaf.

But the Rev. Mr. Sampson does not "practice" healing. He says that healing cannot be practiced, that it can be effective only as the natural outgrowth of the mystical life.

Mr. Sampson's best known books are "Progressive Creation," "Progressive Redemption," "The Message of the Sun" and "The True Mystic." Another book, "The Happiest People in the World," will soon be off the press. This will contain the whole economic and social programme through which the Christian communicism is expected to supplant the present order.

THE TALKING WIRE

"Yes, sir—once, the day before he sailed—or was supposed to have sailed—for the States."

"Short, thick-set man, was he? Carried one shoulder a little lower than the other and had lost the top of a finger on the left hand?"

"Yes, sir, the little finger."

"BORIS BOROVINSKI!" said Cleek, glancing over at Sir Charles. "No going to the States for that gentleman with a 'deal' like this on hand. He'd be close by and in constant touch with her. Did she have any friends in the town, Mr. Beechman?"

"No, not one. She appeared to be of a very retiring disposition and made no acquaintances whatsoever. The only person I ever knew her to evince any interest in was a crippled girl who lived with her bedridden mother and took in needlework. Greta heard of the case and went to visit them."

"Did she ever ask Mrs. Beechman to accompany her?"

"Not that I ever heard of, sir. But it would have been to no purpose if she had. The wife is a very delicate woman—she rarely goes anywhere."

"Hum-m-m! I see! So then you really do not know if there actually was a woman or girl at all. Any idea where the persons were supposed to live?"

"Yes. They hired a room on the top floor of a house adjoining the Ocean Billow Hotel, sir."

"Pretty good neighborhood, that, by Jove, for people who were 'pensioners' to be living in," commented Cleek. "The Ocean Billow Hotel is a modern establishment—lifts, electric lights, liveried attendants—and catering to people of substance and standing."

"Yes," admitted Beechman. "When I was—was—suspended, sir, during the examination and this house taken over by Sir Charles, I carried Mrs. Beechman and Reggie there and we have remained there, nominally under guard, ever since. You see, being convenient and in a straight line, so to speak, Mr. Cleek, it offered extra advantages in case of my being summoned here at a moment's notice."

"H'm. Yes! I see!" said Cleek, stroking his chin "In a straight line from here, eh? House next door would, of course, offer the same advantages; and from a room on the top floor a wiretapping device. * * * Yes, just so! I think, Sophie, I think I smell a very large mouse, my dear, and I shan't be surprised if we've hit upon the place of reception for your messages the very first shot."

"Messages, Mr. Cleek? Messages?" interposed Sir Charles. "You surely do not mean to infer that the woman telegraphed messages from this house? Do you forget then that there is no wire attached to this place?"

Cleek puckered up his brows. For the moment he had forgotten that fact.

"Still, there are wires passing over it, Sir Charles," he said presently, "and if a means of communication with those were established the 'tapper' at the other end could receive messages easily. She is a devil of ingenuity, is Sophie—I wouldn't put it beyond her and her confederates to have rigged up a transmitting instrument of some sort which the woman could carry on her person and attach to the wire when needed."

HERE Sir Charles threw in something which was a facer.

"Quite so," he admitted. "But do not forget, Mr. Cleek, that the deflected message was sent last night and that the woman was not then in this house."

Here Cleek in turn delivered a facer.

"Sure of that, Sir Charles? Sure that she was not? I am told it is true that she left the hotel saying she was going to drown herself, and forthwith disappeared, three nights ago; but I am also told that since the date of Mr. Beechman's suspension this place has been under constant guard night and day, but I have not been told that any of the guards saw her leave the place."

There is an old French proverb which says: "He that protests too much leads to the truth in spite of himself." It was the last man to be called who did this.

"No, sir—nobody passed either in or out, sir—I take my dying oath to that," asserted he, his feelings riled up by the thought that this constant questioning of his statement was a slur upon his devotion to his duty. "Why, sir," turning to the Dock Master, "you must a known—he must a told you—I wouldn't even let young Master Reggie in last night when he come a pleading to be let in to get the school books he'd left behind."

"When he what?" almost roared the Dock Master. "Good Lord, Marshall, have you gone off your head? Do you mean to claim that you saw my boy here—last night? Do you?"

"Certainly, sir. Just after that awful clap of thunder. It was, say, about five or six minutes after—and what with that and the darkness and the way the wind was howling, I never see nothing nor heard nothing of him coming till I got to the door and there he was. 'It's me—Master Reggie Marshall,' he says. 'I've come to get my schoolbooks,' he says. 'I left 'em behind in the hurry and father says he's sure you'll let me go in and get 'em!' 'Oh, does he?' I says. 'Well, I'm surprised at him and at you, too, Master Reggie,' I says, 'a thinking I'd go against orders. Word is that nobody gets in, and nobody does,' I says. Which sets him a snivelling and a pleading till I has to take him by the shoulder and fair drag him away before I could get him to go."

"Well done, Sophie!" exclaimed Cleek. "Gad! What a creature of resource the woman is and what an actress she would make, the vixen! No need to ask you if your son really did come over here last night, Mr. Beechman—your surprise and indignation have answered for you."

"I should think it would, by George!" rapped out the Dock Master, sharply. "Why, look here, Sir Charles; look here, Mr. Cleek. Even if I had been willing, he couldn't have done it. The poor little chap met with an accident when that terrific clap of thunder came and he's been in bad ever since. He missed his footing in coming down the stairs and fell in the darkness."

"In the darkness, Mr. Beechman?—the darkness of a first-class hotel at half past seven in the evening?"

"Yes. That infernal clap of thunder interfered with the electric current in some way, sir. Every light in the hotel went blank out—as black as a pocket, sir—and he fell then. We thought for the moment that the wires must have fused, but it turned out that there was nothing the matter with them—only that the current had been interrupted for a bit."

"BY Jupiter!" Cleek cracked out the two words like the snapping of a whip lash, then screwed 'round on his heel and looked at the telegraph operator.

"Speak up—quick!" he said in the sharp stacco of excitement. "I am told that when that crash came and the diverted message began there was a force that almost knocked you off your stool. Is that true—is it?"

"Yes, sir, perfectly true. It was something terrific. The Lord only knows what it would have been if I'd been touching the instrument."

"You'd have been as dead as Julius Caesar!" flung back Cleek. "No wonder she cut away to see what was wrong; no wonder the lights went out. Mr. Narkom, the limousine—quick! Come along, Sir Charles."

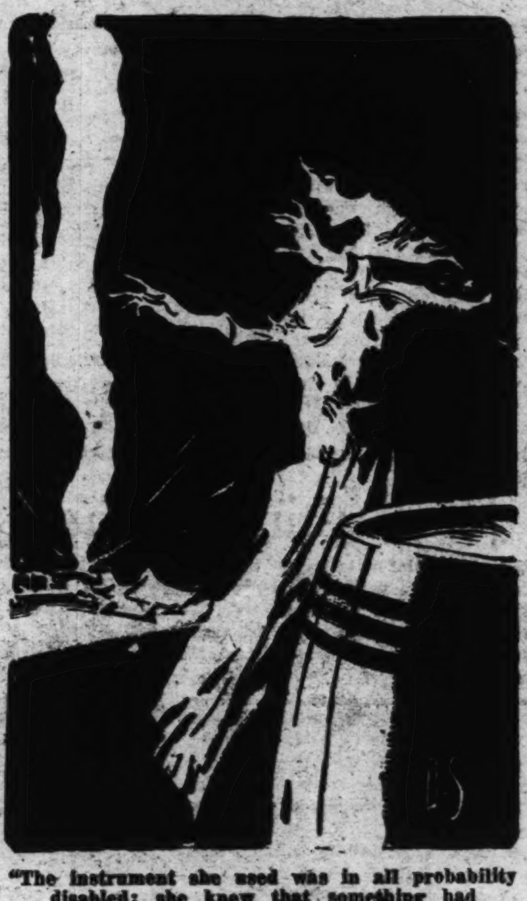
"Where, Mr. Cleek—where?"

"To the top floor of the house next door to the Ocean Billow Hotel, Sir Charles—to see 'Miss Greta Hillmann's' precious pensioners. Unless I am wofully mistaken, gentlemen, one part of this little riddle is already solved and the very elements have conspired to protect old England and to become her foeman's executioner."

He was not mistaken—not in any point with regard to that house and the part it had played in this peculiar case—for when they came to it and demanded in the name of the law the right to enter and to interview 'the bedridden woman and the crippled girl who occupied the top floor," they were met with the announcement that no such persons dwelt there nor had they ever done so.

"It is let to an invalid, it is true," the landlady—a dear, motherly, unsuspecting old soul—told them when they made the demand, "but it is a gentleman, not a lady. A professional gentleman, I believe—artist or sculptor, something of that sort—and never until last night has anybody been with him but his niece, who makes occasional calls. Last night, however, a nephew came—just for a moment. No, nobody has called today, neither has the gentleman left his room. But he often sleeps until late."

He was sleeping forever this time. For when they came to mount the stairs and force open the locked door of the room, there, under a half-opened skylight, a dead man lay, one screwed-up contracted hand still clutching the end of a flex which went up and out to the telegraph wires overhead. On a table beside the body a fused and utterly demolished telegraph instrument stood and it was evident from the scrap of flex still clinging to this that it had once formed part of that which the dead hand held, that it had snapped somehow and that the man was attempting to reattach it to the instrument when death overtook him.



"The instrument she used was in all probability disabled; she knew that something had happened to her brother and flew to find out what."

"Gentlemen, the wire tapper—Boris Borovinski!" said Cleek, as he bent over and looked at him. "Step here, Mr. Beechman, and tell me if this is not the man who played the part of 'Miss Greta Hillmann's' interesting papa."

"Yes—yes!" exclaimed the Dock Master, excitedly. "It is the very man, sir, the very one! But who? But why? But how?"—and looked upward in a puzzled way to where the flex went up and threading through a maze of wires hooked itself fast to one.

"Electrocuted," said Cleek, answering that inquiring glance. "A few thousand volts—a flash of flame through heart and head and limbs and then—this! See his little game, Mr. Narkom? See it, do you, Sir Charles? He was taking the message from the tapped wire with that flex and the fragment that reached the telegraph office only got through when the flex snapped. The furious gale did that, no doubt, whipping it away from its moorings, so to speak, and letting the message flash on before he could prevent it. Can't you read the rest when you look up and see that other wire—the thick one with the insulated coatings torn and frayed by contact with the chimney's rough edge? It is not hard to reconstruct the tragedy when one sees that. When the flex snapped he reached up and grabbed it and was in the very act of again attaching it to the instrument when he became his own executioner. Look for yourself. The wild wind must either have blown the flex against the bared wire of the electric light or the bared wire against the flex—that we shall never know—and in the winking of an eye he was annihilated. But look there—the pile of burnt paper beside the fused instrument and the cinder of a matchbox against it. The force which obliterated life in him infused it into the 'dipped' heads of those little wooden sticks and flashed them into flame. So long as there was anything for that flame to feed upon it continued its work, you see, and Sophie Borovinski found nothing to take away with her after all. Gentlemen, the State Secrets that were stolen will remain England's own—the records were burnt and the dead cannot betray."

"AND now, gentlemen, to the unsolved part of the riddle—the mysterious manner in which the messages were sent from this house."

"I make it that it's the devil's own work, Mr. Cleek," said MacInery, "and that there must have been some accident connected with it the same as with the taking off of the wire-tapping chap."

"Hardly that, I'm afraid," replied Cleek. "I think it was the accident which put a stop to the proceedings here—not one which created them. We now know perfectly well that the woman was in this house—undiscovered and unsuspected for three nights and days, and you may safely lay your life that she wasn't idle, wasn't stopping here for nothing. The pile of papers burnt shows very clearly that considerable intelligence had been forwarded to her brother, so it is safe to infer that she was wiring it to him constantly."

"But how was it possible for her to obtain that information?" queried Sir Charles.

"Well, that's a facer, certainly, Sir Charles, but with such a field of ingenuity as she * * * well, you never know. Sure she couldn't possibly have managed to get into the room and hide herself somewhere?"

"Positive. That thing isn't possible. There's no place where she could have hidden. Come in and see."

He unlocked the door and, followed by the rest, led the way into the room where the inquiry had been held. A glance about it was sufficient to corroborate Sir Charles' statement. On one side stood a large fireproof safe, closely locked; on the other were two windows—iron-grilled and with inside shutters of steel; at one end was a large flat-topped table—at which Sir Charles and MacInery had conducted their investigation of the books, etc.—and at the other a smaller writing table upon which stood a typewriter set on a sound deadening square of felt and over which hung a white-disked electric bulb. There were five chairs and not another mortal thing.

"You see?" said Sir Charles, with a wave of the hand. "She couldn't have hidden in here, neither could she have hidden outside and overhead."

"Quite confident of that?"

"Oh, I can answer for that, Mr. Cleek," put in young Grimsdick. "We were so careful upon that point that Sir Charles never dictated even the smallest thing that he wanted recorded—merely passed over the papers and said, 'Copy that where it is marked.' But the diabolical part of the mystery is that those two fragments of sentences flashed out at the telegraph office at the time that frightful peal of thunder sounded, and at that very instant I was setting them down on the typewriter."

"Hello! Hello!" rapped out Cleek, twitching 'round sharply. "Sure of that, are you—absolutely sure?"

"Positive. Sir Charles will tell you that the thing was so sharp and sudden we all jumped. As for me, I struck a wrong key without meaning to and had to rub out a word and type it again. Here's the paper and here's the place where I erased the word."

Cleek walked over to the typewriter and looked at the paper, saw the erasure, lifted it, looked at other typed sheets lying under it and then knotted up his brows.

"H'm!" he said, reflectively—and looked further. "You've got a devilish hard touch for a man who does this sort of thing constantly and ought, therefore, to be adept in the art of typewriting evenly. And there are other errors and erasures. Look here, my friend, I don't believe you're used to this machine."

"No, sir, I'm not. I'm not accustomed to a shift key. My own machine hasn't one."

"Your own—by gad! And why didn't you bring your own when you came?"

"I DID, but as we found this one already here I started in on it, and when I found it difficult I went to get my own, which I'd left in the outer room, just as I'd taken it from the carrier who brought it over. But the careless beggar must have handled it as if it were a trunk, for the spring was broken, the carriage wouldn't work and two of the type bars were snapped."

"By the eternal! Mr. Beechman, Mr. Beechman! That she-devil ever in here? Ever use this machine?"

"Yes, often. She used to attend to all my correspondence and—good God, man, what are you doing? That thing's Government property, recollect!" For Cleek had laid hands on the thing, found it fast to the table, and taking up a chair, smashed and banged at it with all his force.

"Government destruction, you blind idiot!" he rapped out, excitedly. "Didn't I tell you she was a devil of ingenuity? Look here—look here!"

Protruding from the surface of the table set at regular intervals, there were 42 needle points of steel—one for each key of the typewriter—which a moment before had pierced the felt's surface just sufficient to meet the bottom of the "key" above it, and to be driven downward when that key was depressed.

"Gentlemen, the answer to the riddle: You have been supplying her with the information yourselves!" he cried. "A ducat to a doorknob every time a letter was struck on this machine its exact duplicate was recorded somewhere else. Get an ax—get an ax and let us find out to what these steel points lead."

And when an ax was brought and he set about demolishing the table they did find out. A magnet and a sensitized wire hidden under the surface of the table communicated with yet another wire which ran down the wall behind one of the table's back legs and, passing thence through a minute hole in the floor, descended and disappeared. Following that wire's course, they, too, descended until the end was reached at last in a far corner of the cellar.

And there, behind an upturned empty cask, they came upon yet another wire which wound upward and was found afterward to travel out and up beside the "leader," until it joined the private wire of the Dock Yard just outside the dormer window of what had once been Miss Greta Hillmann's bedroom. And to these wires—the one descending and the other ascending from behind that empty cask in the cellar—there was a singular contrivance attached. To one, a plain, everyday instrument for dispatching telegrams by the Morse system, and to the other a curious little keyboard which was an exact counterpart of the keyboard to the typewriter upstairs; and beside this some remnants of food from the store cupboard of the house and a sheaf of paper leaves covered with printed characters.

"Gentlemen, the absolute end of the riddle at last," said Cleek, as he took up one of these. "Look at them—Government secrets. Look, Sir Charles. Every touch of a letter on the keyboard of the typewriter upstairs registered its exact duplicate on this infernal contrivance down here, and as fast as it was recorded, that vixen wired it on to Boris Borovinski. Can't you understand now why she left her post here and flew to him? The shock which had killed him and traveled with lessened force down the wire to the telegraph operator, was felt here; the instrument she used was in all probability disabled; she knew that something had happened to her brother, and flew to find out what. Even the shrewdest slip up sometimes and overlook things. Her foolish slip lay in this: that she forgot to take with her these original drafts of the intelligence she had wired to the dead man. What's that, Mr. MacInery? An accident, you say, stepping in again? Oh, well, perhaps that's so; but, personally, I always like to think that there's a Power above, and that when men and nations have played the game fairly, that somehow, some way"——

He swept off his hat.

"Let's put it in another way then," he said. "Gentlemen—the King!"

The next story in this series is entitled "The Ladder of Light." A famous Indian jewel disappears in the space of a few seconds from an inaccessible room. But it reappears in a few hours, with the assistance of Cleek.

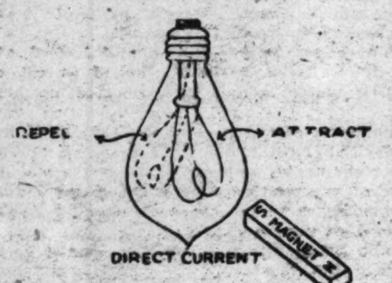
NOVEL THINGS WORTH KNOWING

How to Test Electric Light

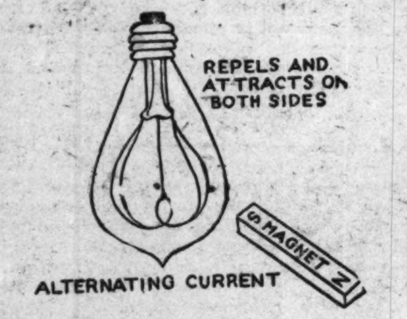
THERE are several easily performed, yet interesting experiments by which it can be determined whether the electric current you are using is direct or alternating. Among these the following two appear the most striking:

Connect two insulated copper wires (one to carry the positive charge, the other to carry the negative) to a source of electric current, taking care that the two ends be not allowed to touch. Prepare a bath of common salt solution (a quarter of a cup of salt to a quart of water). Then immerse the bare ends of the wires in the solution about one-eighth of an inch.

If the current is direct, the positive pole will sparkle and gradually become red or salmon pink in color. At the same time, the negative pole will grow black and myriads of tiny bubbles will float up from its surface. But in the case of alternating current both wires will sparkle. Although it is unnoticeable to the unaided eye, the two poles alternate at the rate of about 7200 alternations a minute. If the ends of the two wires are rapidly immersed in and withdrawn from the solution, each wire will be coated with red and black spaces about a quarter of an inch apart. These colors are due to the changes of the positive and negative alterations.



The other experiment involves the principal of magnetism and requires no more complex apparatus than a lighted incandescent lamp, preferably with a carbon-filament, and a horseshoe magnet or a magnetic bar. Hold one pole of the magnet at the side of the lamp. If the filament be attracted or repelled in one direction only, the current is direct. If the magnet be shifted to the other side of the lamp, the filament will remain bent in the same direction as before, for if it attracts in the first position, it repels in the second, or vice versa. But if the current be alternating, a peculiar phenomenon can be observed. Since the polarity of the filament changes with each alternation, about 7200 times a minute, it is repelled and attracted at that high rate of speed and so vibrates. With strong magnets, the filament sometimes vibrates so violently that it strikes against the sides of the bulb or breaks itself in the attempt. By adjusting the magnet in different positions about the lamp, some dazzling effects may be obtained.



Device for Storing Heat

AN inventor in Stockholm, Sweden, has devised an apparatus for storing heat. It consists of a mass of heat-absorbing material, in which is placed a coil of resistance wire. Surrounding the heat-storing material is a heat-insulating material, while at the top is a damper which may be operated to permit the heat stored in the magazine to radiate out of the top. The entire apparatus is inclosed in a heat-radiating cover.

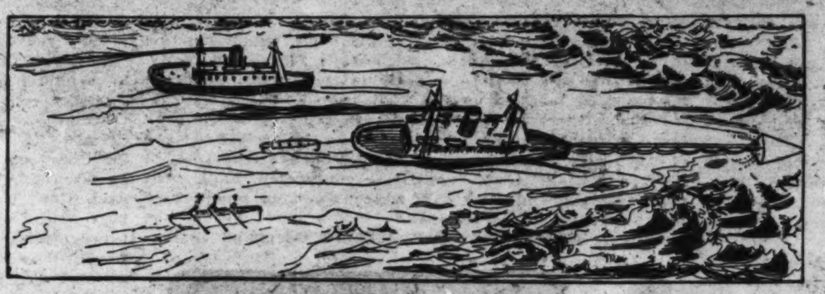
To facilitate the radiation of heat there is a system of air passages through the heat-storing materials. The apparatus is adapted to be used during off-peak periods, storing heat which may be used as needed. An experimental apparatus about a yard high, 25 inches long and 15 inches wide showed a storing capacity of about 25,000 kilogram calories, while a temperature in the storing magazine of about 1100 degrees Fahrenheit, was obtained.

New Device for Spreading Oil Over Troubled Waters

"POURING oil on the troubled waters" has long been known as an efficient method of preventing the breaking of waves. But all the devices now in use have some defects. The commonest way to pour out the oil is to put it in canvas bags and after pricking holes in the bags to throw these over the side of the vessel. This is fairly effective in short storms, but so much oil is wasted that it would be useless in prolonged rough weather.

Harry W. Stocking of San Francisco has been demonstrating on the bar outside of the Golden Gate a novel patent of his which will pour oil from a sea anchor to windward and spread it for two or three hundred feet around the vessel. This is more effective in making the surface smooth and navigable than when the oil is distributed nearby.

Mr. Stocking's apparatus consists of a small oil tank on the vessel, a suitable pipe for the oil, supported by a hawser from which a drag anchor is hung. A drag anchor is made of heavy canvas stretched over a framework so as to form a large cone-shaped object that floats in the water to windward as far as necessary. Upon the drag anchor is a nozzle through which the oil is discharged on each side of the drag. The oil is pumped through the pipe from the vessel to the nozzle.



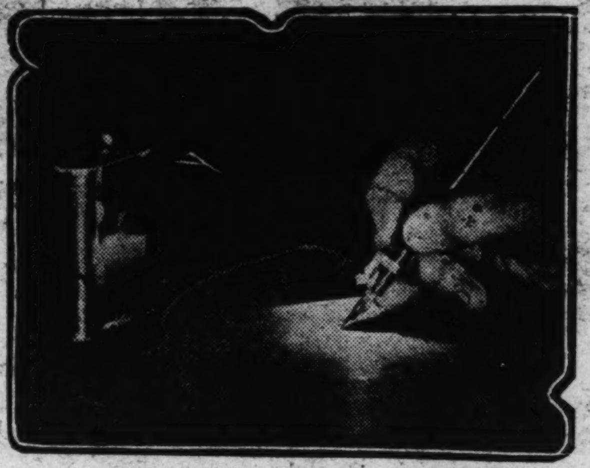
Using Stocking's Marine Oil-Spreader. Steamship in distress using drag-anchor lies in a wake of oil and delivers passengers to a ship standing by.

This arrangement distributes the oil where it will do most good in preventing the waves that come rolling from windward from breaking. Thus the ship is protected from the heavy sea.

This may be used by a boat at anchor, by life savers desiring to launch a boat from a beach, by life boats that have been put over in a storm.

Pen for Writing in the Dark

A CLEVER and simple little apparatus that enables one to write in the dark has just been patented. It consists of a battery so small that it can be carried in the waistcoat pocket, connected by wires with a tiny electric lamp that fastens upon the fountain pen by a clip where the first finger normally holds it. The lamp is covered by a silver reflector which throws the light down upon the paper, making a bright spot a few inches wide. The illuminated patch, of course, follows the pen as it writes.



Photograph of the illuminated pen.

It is evident that not many people need to write in the dark; but stenographers who have to "take" political speeches in badly lighted halls or at open air night meetings, men who need to write in rooms where it is impossible or unadvisable to have a bright light, will find this a valuable assistance and a greater saver of eyesight.

An American who returned from Germany recently brought a pencil that illuminates itself in a similar way, only the battery is in the shaft of the pencil itself. In this the battery is so small that it lasts only a few hours.

Old-Fashioned Sulphur for Boils

THE old idea that boils come from "bad blood" is upheld by Dr. F. Tweddell. He writes that four years ago he treated a case of recurring boils by all modern methods, with little or no effect. In despair he prescribed plain powdered sulphur a heaping teaspoonful three times a day after meals, when to his astonishment the boils shrank up and disappeared even more rapidly than after an incision.

The bulky and sandy properties of this substance led the doctor to use sulphuric acid in its place. This chemical was given in 30-drop doses after meals in two or three ounces of water. The mouth was well rinsed out immediately after taking. He says that "the effect on boils and carbuncles in every case was astonishing, the astringent action being wonderful."

Boils are found in people who are run down, overworked, dissipated or who get insufficient exercise and fresh air. Dr. Tweddell feels sure that in such cases the blood is deficient in sulphur trioxide, else why should sulphuric acid act so promptly and efficaciously in these cases? Improvement is so rapid that it is usually unnecessary to continue treatment more than eight or 10 days.

Sulphuric acid is, however, such a virulent poison that no sane person will attempt to take it except as prescribed by a competent physician.

Why Sinks Are Not Made High

IN a recent issue of the Survey the question why kitchen sinks have been made so low was discussed.

No one seemed able to explain. Finally a certain maker discovered that the original sinks were made when the washing of dishes and other sink work was done in wooden tubs with high sides. Such a tub when used in a high sink came up too far, so the sink was made low. Furthermore, as running water and fixed faucets had not long been made, the tub had to be lifted out of the sink, and the lower the sink the lighter the lift.

Though improvements in faucets, dishpans and other accessories of kitchen sinks have been made, no one has seemed to realize that the sink could be improved by raising. So women were—and are—compelled to endure discomfort when doing ordinary household work.

"There may be a certain percentage of inconvenience to be reached before the human mind grasps the fact that something must be altered," remarks the Journal of the American Medical Association.

"The wise inventor attains a reputation for brilliancy by making his invention before the need becomes obvious to others."

Twitching Foot Cured by Explaining It to the Patient

WHEN a foot twitches without apparent cause, automatically as it were, the doctors call it a pedal tic. Such a condition is not serious, but it is annoying and soon gets on the nerves of the sufferer. Dr. Gustav E. Boehme, the New York nerve specialist, reports to the Medical Record a case of more than the usual interest, and its cure by psychanalysis.

A certain J. S., 29 years old, a clerk, had suffered for four years from a twitching of the right foot when at rest. Sometimes his left foot also twitched. He would have spasms of foot-twitching when in bed, when seated, when walking. His feet seemed to go beyond his control and he would stagger as if drunk. Otherwise he was well and there was nothing in his family history that shed light upon his condition.

Dr. Boehme recognized that there was nothing organically wrong with him, so he began studying his "subconscious reflexes." This was the history revealed:

The pedal tic of worry.

Four years previously "he had been in love with a young lady who had broken her troth with him. He brooded over this for a long time until he met his present wife, when, he said, his interest in the former innamorata ceased."

He had been married two years, and was the father of a 13-months-old baby, of whom he was very fond. His wife, however, is apathetic; she falls asleep in the evening, instead of chatting with him as he would like after a hard day's work, and she has so wounded his feelings by her indifferences that his affection for her is on the wane.

He was a clerk, who spent his days on a high chair with his feet dangling down, at times crossed. When worried his feet twitched. The twitching had begun about the time of his unfortunate love affair four years ago.

Dr. Boehme explained the twitching to J. S., saying that most men when seated cross one leg over the other and tend to swing the suspended foot. This is generally the right foot. When mentally perturbed the swinging becomes more pronounced. When J. S. returned to the unsatisfactory environment of his home and sat down to read "his thoughts would wander, his worries would crowd into his consciousness, and the foot twitching, at first voluntary, would begin. Gradually, subconsciously, the tic gained the ascendancy."

Dr. Boehme described this condition to his patient, improved his general hygiene and made him take long evening walks with cheerful friends. His condition improved within three days, and all twitchings had ceased after three weeks. J. S. declared he had no fear of a recurrance, but Dr. Boehme is not sure about this, saying it depends upon the clearness with which the patient has interpreted the symptoms.

No More Desire for Tobacco

Arthur Krouse is a locomotive fireman who had been using tobacco since he was a boy. About two years ago he began to have spells of illness. His memory was getting very bad and his eyes bothered him a good deal. He had tried in vain to conquer the habit until he got a certain book and now he is freed from the thralldom of tobacco and his health is wonderfully improved. Anyone who desires to read the book can obtain it absolutely free by writing to Edward J. Woods, 1301B, Station E, New York City. It tells how the habit of smoking, chewing or snuff taking can be conquered in three days.

NEW AND ODD THINGS IN SCIENCE

A Mathematical Paradox

HERE is a paradox for the curious. It is taken from Prof. Bon's book "Ist Es Wahr Dass 2x2=4 Ist?" (Is It True That 2x2=4?), the first volume of which was published last year. It may be said parenthetically that this volume does not answer the awful question propounded in its title, and a battling world is still eagerly awaiting the appearance of the second volume in order to learn if it has been right or wrong in saying that two and two are four. But in the 523 pages of philosophical speculation some interesting problems are propounded. For instance:

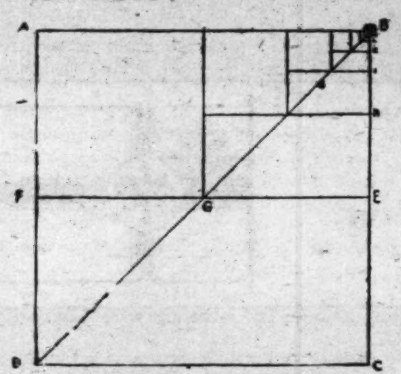

Diagram to illustrate Prof. Bon's mathematical paradox.

Suppose that a straight line be bisected, and each half again bisected, and so on, and if we imagine that a limit exists when the segments become indivisible, we obtain, according to the author, an impossible result when we apply the method to the repeated bisection of a side and a diagonal of a square.

As the diagonal is longer than the side, it is obvious that when the point of further indivisiblity of the side has been reached the diagonal is still long enough for further division.

The only other alternative is that a finite line is divisible an infinite number of times. And if we suppose a line to be made up of indivisible elements these can be nothing else but points. If the number of these points be any but an exact power of two the process of bisection will come to a standstill long before the infinitesimal elements have been reached.

Dr. Greeley Finds Germ of Smallpox

DR. HORACE GREELEY of Brooklyn reports to the Medical Record that he has discovered the long-sought microbe of smallpox. He found "an apparently identical organism" from the "vesicles of 25 cases of successful vaccination, from a like number of cases of undoubted chickenpox, and from five cases of recognized and undoubted smallpox."

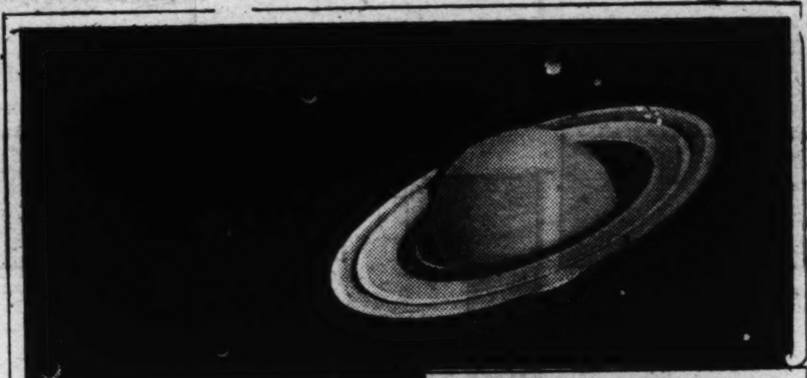
From Dr. Greeley's technical description of this new microbe it may be gathered that it is spherical and from 0.3 to 0.6 microns (or 0.000117 to 0.000234 inch) in diameter. It is in the form of multiplying spores, which just before division assume the shape of a figure 8, with a nucleus in each half. These develop into branching masses with spores at the end of the branches.

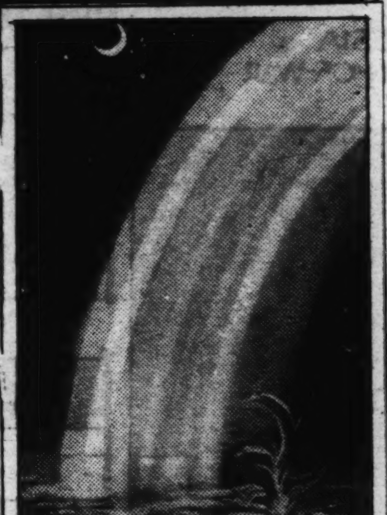
Dr. Greeley has grown them in cultures. He believes they multiply on the mucous membranes of the nose at the beginning of the disease, and the spores when shed penetrate the blood vessels and are wafted to all parts of the body, "landing in the skin capillaries, where conditions of lower temperature and more light, perhaps, favor further proliferation. In this connection we should remember how the eruption affects the face and hands."

Dr. Greeley concludes that vaccinia and variola are identical, the difference being that "vaccination produces a local and at most a lymphatic infection, usually stopped at the nearest chain of glands, and represents the inoculation of an organism directly derived from a different species of animal, and therefore probably of low relative virulence, while smallpox is undoubtedly contracted through the respiratory tract and is due to one derived directly from an animal of like species which, as shown, through spore formation, passes into the blood and is thrown to all corners."

ACCORDING to African Engineering, a French scientist discovered that the presence of radium on the point of a lightning conductor increases the electrical conductivity of the surrounding atmosphere enormously and generally enables atmospheric charges to be conducted away harmlessly without any lightning flash.

Saturn, the Resplendent Evening Star, and Its Rings





FOR the first time in 30 years, Saturn, strangest of the planets, is now the evening star. At 4 p. m. on Aug. 10 it reached the nearest point at which it ever approaches the world, which is 793,213,100 miles away, and now shines with such splendor as to dominate the Southwestern heavens.

The planet's famous rings are not visible to the naked eye, but can be discerned on any clear night through a small telescope. They are in their most favorable position for observation this year, being tilted towards us as far as possible, and afford one of the most magnificent spectacles of the sky. They were discovered by Galileo, using the low-power telescope which was the first ever invented.

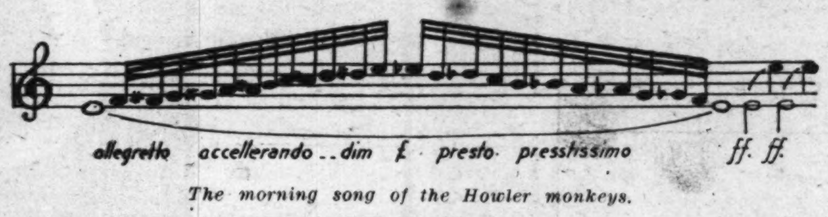
The rings are 50,000 miles wide—a trackway on which, if it were solid, six earths could roll side by side. In addition, the planet has 10 moons, which only powerful glasses can descry.

Saturn is a huge fireball with an envelope of incandescent gas, its temperature being between 800 and 900 degrees Fahrenheit. Its density is far less than that of water, so that it would float like a cork in the ocean. Owing to its heat, no life can exist upon its vast surface.

At the equator of the planet its belt spans the sky like a glittering arch, rising straight from each side of the horizon. It is so narrow as to seem little more than a thread of gold bisecting the vault of heaven; but as one advanced into one or the other of the hemispheres, the gigantic handle would broaden into a resplendent rainbow, with a kaleidoscopic change of color and ever-varying forms. Through the diaphanous band could be seen the satellites of the planet and the stars of the firmament.

Song of Howler Monkeys in Solos and Choruses

THAT certain species of monkeys sing is a fact that has been stated by many naturalists. The song of the "howlers" was first described by the German Marrgaff during his stay in South America from 1636 to 1644. A detailed study of their singing is now published by P. G. Mahoudeau in the Revue Anthropologique, who quotes many modern naturalists and explorers, all of whom confirm Margraff's account, which is about as follows:



The morning song of the Howler monkeys.

"Every day, morning and evening, the 'howlers' assemble in the woods. One of them stations himself in a high place and signs to the others to seat themselves around him and listen. As soon as they are in place he begins a discourse in a voice so loud and rapid that, hearing him from a distance, one would believe that all were shouting together. However, there is only one, and while he is speaking all the others maintain the deepest silence. Then, when he stops, he signs with his hand for the others to reply. In an instant they all begin to shout at once until, with another sign of his hand, he orders silence. They obey and are silent. Then the first resumes his discourse of song, and not until they have listened to him very attentively do they separate and the assembly breaks up."

Schomburg also notes the existence of a leader of the singing, with whose solos a chorus alternates. He says:

"One could see the bony drum of their hyoid bone, which gives to their voices the strength for which they are distinguished, rise and fall while they shouted. The sounds they uttered recalled sometimes the grunting of a pig, sometimes the cry of a jaguar leaping upon its prey, sometimes the low, terrible growling of that carnivore on perceiving a danger menacing it."

Other observers state that these monkeys can utter two notes at once, one sharp, the other low. This strange phenomenon is accounted for by the fact that the air issuing from their lungs can pass directly through their glottis or through a large cavity in their hyoid bone which forms a real sounding box. The air issuing directly forms the higher notes, that which passes through the hollow in the hyoid bone forms the low notes.

Waterhouse, the English naturalist and musician, described the song of the gibbon and reduced it to musical notation. He says:

"The song which the Wouwou gibbon utters in the morning begins with the E of the middle octave; then it rises gradually from semitone to semitone to the upper octave. Throughout the ascent as well as throughout the descent the fundamental tone E of the middle octave persists; it serves as a point of departure, a sort of bass for all the other tones.

"The sounds of the ascending gamut are emitted at first allegretto; they continue accelerando; they go on crescendo and then become more slow. Descending, the sounds become louder and more rapid, prestissimo, and terminate very rapidly.

"At the end of his series of cries, or, better, his song, the virtuous hylobatid hurls forth twice with all his strength a piercing cry formed of the two Es in octave. The duration of the lower E corresponds to a half tone and that of the upper E to a quarter tone."

What Mould on Bread Looks Like When Magnified

PLACE a slice of bread on a plate and cover it with a tumbler. In a few days it will be covered with mould. This mould is pretty when looked at under a microscope, and it does not need a powerful one. A speck of it should be taken off on the point of a knife, placed in a drop of alcohol on a piece of glass and covered with another piece of glass.

The microscope reveals that this mould is a fungus growth, and the species of fungus depends upon the humidity of the bread. Fresh bread rubbed on a floor and sprinkled with a few drops of water produces after five or six days an abundant white mould, which soon covers the bread and even climbs up the glass. Slightly magnified, it will be seen to consist of slender stalks, each carrying a tiny white ball. These ripen and turn black. On the glass it can be seen that filaments like minute arches run from stalk to stalk, and at the point where they touch the glass they send forth little roots. The balls are called sporanges. Each of them at maturity bursts and liberates a quantity of black spores which fall and immediately germinate into a new crop. After discharging their spores the sporanges look like minute mushrooms.

1. Rhizopus Nigricans, through a magnyfying glass.
2. Part of the same under a microscopa

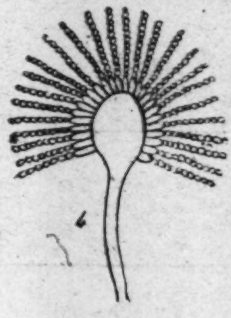
Penicillium glaucum, highly magnified.

This species of mould is called Rhizopus nigricans.

If the bread has been very moist it will not produce the Rhizopus, but other moulds known generically as Mucor, which vary with the seasons and localities. There are also red spots caused almost certainly by the bacillus-prodigiosus. There is likely to be the common "blue mould," which is the most widespread plant in the world, being found wherever there is land. Its scientific name is Pencillium glaucum. Under the microscope it shows as a mass of interlaced filaments from which rise short vertical stalks, these branching once or twice near their top.



Aspergillus repens, highly magnified.

If the bread is dry and no water has been added to it the mould will not make its appearance for a week or two and will be of an entirely different character, though likely to be mixed with the previous two. The most frequent is blue in color and appears in little patches. When magnified this mould is seen to consist of small threads terminating in rounded heads. Under a higher power the heads are seen to be the swollen ends of the filaments from which short [illegible] radiate in every direction [illegible] each bearing a row of spores. [illegible] species is named Aspergillus repens.

Among these are found many perfectly spherical balls, bright yellow in color and about the size of the head of a pin. These are only another form of the spores of Aspergillus and develop from the same root.

Another mould of dry bread is black. It is similar in structure to Aspergillus.

All the processes of growth, seeding and germinating of these moulds can be watched with a good magnifying glass.

HOW many people know the flags of the various nations of the world? Scarcely one in a hundred. And when anyone has learned them all, he is just as apt as not to get into an argument, especially over those two which are both German and yet quite dissimilar. The reason for this lies in the fact that several of the great Powers—Russia, Great Britain, Germany, Austria—have different standards for afloat and ashore. But here are the flags of Europe in their proper colors, as well as the sun-standard of far-off Japan, which has become an important factor in the world-wide war now in progress. Red seems to be the favorite color. Black is the rarest. Only those two grim rivals in the first carnage of the great war, Belgium and Germany, have it in their national emblems.
